CO'NSTABLE. n. ſ. [comes ſtabuli, as it is ſuppoſed.] 1. Lord high conſtable is an ancient officer of the crown. The function of the conſtable of England conſiſted in the care of the common peace of the land in deeds of arms, and in matters of war. To the court of the conſtable and marſhal belonged the cognizance of contracts, deeds of arms without the realm, and combats and blaſonry of arms within it. The firſt conſtable of England was created by the Conqueror, and the office continued hereditary 'till the thirteenth of Henry VIII. when it was laid aſide, as being ſo powerful as to become troubleſome to the king. From theſe mighty magiſtrates are derived the inferiour conſtables of hundreds and franchiſes; two of whom were ordained, in the thirteenth of Edward I. to be choſen in every hundred for the conſervation of the peace, and view of armour. Theſe are now called high conſtables, becauſe continuance of time, and increaſe both of people and offences, have occaſioned others in every town of inferiour authority, called petty conſtables. Beſides theſe, we have conſtables denominated from particular places; as, conſtable of the Tower, of Dover caſtle, of the caſtle of Carnarvon; but theſe are poroperly caſtellani, or governours of caſtles. Cowel. Chamb. 2. To over-run the Constable. [Perhaps from conte ſtable, Fr. the ſettled, firm and ſtated account.] To ſpend more than what a man knows himſelf to be worth: a low phraſe.

(1.) When I came hither, I was lord high conſtable,
And duke of Buckingham; now poor Edward Bohun. Shakeſp.

The knave conſtable had ſet me i' th' ſtocks, i' th' common ſtocks, for a witch. Shakeſp. Merry Wives of Windſor.

The conſtable being a ſober man, and an enemy to ſedition, went to obſerve what they did. Clarendon.

Co'nstableship. n. ſ. [from conſtable.] The office of a conſtable.

This keeperſhip is annexed to the conſtableſhip of the caſtle, and that granted out in leaſe. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

(3.) ——— I and my friend
Have, by your wiſdom, been this day acquitted
Of grievous penalties; in lieu whereof,
Three thouſand ducats, due unto the Jew,
We freely cope your courteous pains withal. Shakeſp.

To Cope. v. n. 1. To contend; to ſtruggle; to ſtrive. It has with before the thing or perſon oppoſed. [In this ſenſe it is a word of doubtful etymology. The conjecture of Junius derives it from koopen, to buy, or ſome other word of the ſame import; ſo that to cope with, ſignifies to interchange blows, or any thing elſe, with another. 2. To encounter; to interchange kindneſs or ſentiments.

(1.) ——— Let your trains
March by us, that we may peruſe the men
We ſhould have cop'd withal. Shakeſp. Henry IV.
It is likely thou wilt undertake
A thing, like death, to chide away this ſhame,
That copes with death itſelf, to 'ſcape from it. Shakeſp.
——— But Eve was Eve;
This far his over-match, who ſelf-deceiv'd
And raſh, beforehand had no better weigh'd
The ſtrength he was to cope with, or his own. Milton.

They perfectly underſtood both the hares and the enemy they were to cope withal. L'Eſtrange.

——— On every plain
Hoſt cop'd with hoſt, dire was the din of war. Philips.

Their generals have not been able to cope with the troops of Athens, which I have conducted. Addiſon's Whig Examiner.

If the mind apply itſelf firſt to eaſier ſubjects, and things near a-kin to what is already known: and then advance to the more remote and knotty parts of knowledge by ſlow degrees, it will be able, in this manner, to cope with great difficulties, and prevail over them with amazing and happy ſucceſs. Watts on the Mind.

(2.) ——— Thou freſh piece
Of excellent witchcraft, who of force muſt know
The royal fool thou cop'ſt with. Shakeſp. Winter's Tale.

A galeated eſchinus being copped and ſomewhat conic. Woodward.

CO'PPEL. n. ſ. [This word is variouſly ſpelt; as copel, cupel, cuple, and cuppel; but I cannot find its etymology.] An inſtrument uſed in chymiſtry in the form of a diſh, made of aſhes, well waſhed, to cleanſe them from all their ſalt; or of bones thoroughly calcined. Its uſe is to try and purify gold and ſilver, which is done by mingling lead with the metal, and expoſing it in the coppel to a violent fire a long while. The impurities of the metal will then be carried off in droſs, which is called the litharge of of gold and ſilver. The refiners call the coppel a teſt. Harris.

CO'PPER. n. ſ. [koper, Dutch; cuprum, Latin.] One of the ſix primitive metals. Copper is the moſt ductile and malleable metal, after gold and ſilver. Of a mixture of copper and lapis calaminaris is formed braſs; a compoſition of copper and tin makes bell-metal; and copper and braſs, melted in equal quantities, produces what the French call bronze, uſed for figures and ſtatues. Chambers. Copper is heavier than iron or tin; but lighter than ſilver, lead, and gold. Hill on Foſſils.

Two veſſels of fine copper, precious as gold. Ezra, viii. 27.

CO'PPER. n. ſ. A veſſel made of copper; commonly uſed for a boiler larger than a moveable pot.

They boiled it in a copper to the half; then they poured it into earthen veſſels. Bac. Nat. Hiſt.

CO'PPER-NOSE. n. ſ. [copper and noſe.] A red noſe.

He having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praiſe for a good complexion: I had as lieve Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper noſe. Shakeſpeare.

Gutta roſacea ariſeth in little hard tubercles, affecting the face all over with great itching, which, being ſcratched, looks red, and riſe in great welks, rendering the viſage fiery; and, makes copper-noſes, as we generally expreſs them. Wiſeman.

CO'PPER-PLATE. n. ſ. A plate on which pictures are engraven for the neater impreſſion: diſtinguiſhed from a wooden cut.

CO'PPERAS. n. ſ. [kopperooſe, Dutch; couperouſe, French; ſuppoſed to be found in copper mines only.] A name given to three ſorts of vitriol; the green, the bluiſh green, and the white, which are produced in the mines of Germany, Hungary, and other countries. But what is commonly ſold here for copperas, is an artificial vitriol, made of a kind of ſtones found on the ſea-ſhore in Eſſex, Hampſhire, and ſo weſtward, ordinarily called gold ſtones from their colour. They abound with iron, and are expoſed to the weather in beds above ground, and receive the rains and dews, which in time breaks and diſſolves the ſtones: the liquor that runs off is pumped into boilers, in which is firſt put old iron, which, in boiling, diſſolves. This factitious copperas, in many reſpects, agrees with the native green vitriol. Chambers. Hill.

It may be queſtioned, whether, in this operation, the iron or copperas be tranſmuted, from the cognation of copperas with copper, and the iron remaining after converſion. Brown.

CO'PPERSMITH. n. ſ. [copper and ſmith.] One that manufactures copper.

Salmoneus, as the Grecian tale is,
Was a mad copperſmith of Elis;
Up at his forge by morning-peep. Swift.

To CO'PULATE. v. a. [copulo, Lat.] To unite; to conjoin; to link together.

If the force of cuſtom, ſimple and ſeparate, be great, the force of cuſtom copulate and conjoined, and collegiate, is far greater. Bacon.

To Co'pulate. v. n. To come together as different ſexes.

Not only the perſons ſo copulating are infected, but alſo their children. Wiſeman's Surgery.

Copula'tion. n. ſ. [from copulate.] The congreſs or embrace of the two ſexes.

Sundry kinds, even of conjugal copulation, are prohibited as unhoneſt. Hooker.

Co'pulative. adj. [copulativus, Latin.] A term of grammar. Copulative propoſitions are thoſe which have more ſubjects or predicates connected by affirmative or negative conjunctions; as, riches and honours are temptations to pride: Cæſar conquered the Gauls and the Britons: neither gold nor jewels will purchaſe immortality. Watts's Logick.

CO'PY. n. ſ. [copie, French; copia, low Latin.] Quod cuipiam facta eſt copia exſcribendi. Junius inclines, after his manner, to derive it from κόπος, labour; becauſe, ſays he, to copy another's writing is very painful and laborious.] 1. A tranſcript from the archetype or original. 2. An individual book; one of many books: as, a good or fair copy 3. The autograph; the original; the archetype; that from which any thing is copied. 4. An inſtrument by which any conveyance is made in law. 5. A picture drawn from another picture.

(1.) If virtue's ſelf were loſt, we might
From your fair mind new copies write. Waller.

But in them nature's copy's not eternal. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

Copy-book. n. ſ. [copy and book.] A book in which copies are written for learners to imitate.

Co'py-hold. n. ſ. [copy and hold.] A tenure, for which the tenant hath nothing to ſhew but the copy of the rolls made by the ſteward of his lord's court: for the ſteward, as he enrolls other things done in the lord's court, ſo he regiſters ſuch tenants as are admitted in the court, to any parcel of land or tenement belonging to the manor; and the tranſcript of this is called the court-roll, the copy of which the tenant takes from him, and keeps as his only evidence. This is called a baſe tenure, becauſe it holds at the will of the lord; yet not ſimply, but according to the cuſtom of the manor; ſo that if a copy-holder break not the cuſtom of the manor, and thereby forfeit his tenure, he cannot be turned out at the lord's pleaſure. Theſe cuſtoms of manors vary in one point or other, almoſt in every manor. Some copy-holds are finable, and ſome certain: that which is finable, the lord rates at what fine or income he pleaſes, when the tenant is admitted into it: that which is certain is a kind of inheritance, and called in many places cuſtomary; becauſe the tenant dying, and the hold being void, the next of blood paying the cuſtomary fine, as two ſhillings for an acre, or ſo, cannot be denied his admiſſion. Some copy-holders have, by cuſtom, the wood growing upon their own land, which by law they could not have. Some hold by the verge in ancient demeſne; and though they hold by copy, yet are they in account, a kind of freeholder: for, if ſuch a one commit felony, the king hath annum, diem, and vaſtum, as in caſe of freehold. Some others hold by common tenure, called mere copy-hold; and they committing felony, their land eſcheats to the lord of the manor. Cowel.

If a cuſtomary tenant die, the widow ſhall have what the law calls her free bench in all his copy-hold lands. Addiſ.

Copy-holder. n. ſ. [from copyhold.] One that is poſſeſſed of land in copyhold.

To Co'py. v. a. [from the noun.] 1. To tranſcribe; to write after an original: it has ſometimes out, a kind of pleonaſm. 2. To imitate; to propoſe to imitation; to endeavour to reſemble.

(1.) He who hurts a harmleſs neighbour's peace,
Who loves a lie, lame ſlander helps about,
Who writes a libel, or who copies out. Pope's Epiſtles.

(2.) He that borrows other mens experience, with this deſign of copying it out, poſſeſſes himſelf of one of the greateſt advantages. Decay of Piety.

Set the examples, and their ſouls inflame,
To copy out their great forefathers fame. Dryd. K. Arthur.
To copy her few nymphs aſpir'd,
Her virtues fewer ſwains admir'd. Swift.

To Co'py. v. n. 1. To do any thing in imitation of ſomething elſe. 2. It has ſometimes from before the thing imitated. 3. Sometimes after.

(1.) Some imagine, that whatſoever they find in the picture of a maſter, who has acquired reputation, muſt of neceſſity be excellent; and never fail, when they copy, to follow the bad as well as the good things. Dryd. Du Freſnoy.

(2.) When a painter copies from the life, he has no privilege to alter features and lineaments, under pretence that his picture will look better. Dryden.

(3.) Several of our countrymen, and Mr. Dryden in particular, ſeem very often to have copied after it in their dramatick writings, and in their poems upon love. Addiſ. Spectator.

To Coque't. v. a. [from the noun.] To entertain with compliments and amorous tattle; to treat with an appearance of amorous tenderneſs.

You are coquetting a maid of honour, my lord looking on to ſee how the gameſters play, and I railing at you both. Swift.

To Coque't. v. n. To act the lover, to entice by blandiſhments.

Phyllis, who but a month ago
Was marry'd to the Tunbridge beau,
I ſaw coquetting t'other night,
In publick, with that odious knight. Swift.

Co'quetry. n. ſ. [coqueterie, French.] Affectation of amorous advances; deſire of attracting notice.

I was often in company with a couple of charming women, who had all the wit and beauty one could deſire in female companions, without a daſh of coquetry, that from time to time gave me a great many agreeable torments.

Addiſon, Spectator.

COQUE'TTE. n. ſ. [coquette, French; from coquart, a prattler.] A gay, airy girl; a girl who endeavours to attract notice.

Co'racle. n. ſ. [cwrwgle, Welſh, probably from corium, leather, Latin.] A boat uſed in Wales by fiſhers; made by drawing leather or oiled cloth upon a frame of wicker work.

CO'RAL. n. ſ. [corallium, Latin.] 1. Red coral is a plant of as great harſhneſs and ſtony nature, while growing in the water, as it has after long expoſure to the air. The vulgar opinion, that coral is ſoft, while in the ſea, proceeds from a ſoft and thin coat, of a cruſtaceous matter, covering it while it is growing, and which is taken off before it is packed up for uſe. The whole coral plant grows to a foot or more in height, and is variouſly ramified. It is thickeſt at the ſtem, and its branches grow gradually ſmaller. It grows to ſtones, without a root, or without any way penetrating them, but as it is found to grow, and take in its nouriſhment in the manner of plants, and to produce flowers and ſeeds, or at leaſt a matter analogous to ſeeds, it properly belongs to the vegetable kingdom. Hill's Materia Medica. 2. The piece of coral which children have about their necks, imagined to aſſiſt them in breeding teeth.

(1.) In the ſea, upon the ſouth-weſt of Sicily, much coral is found. It is a ſubmarine plant: it hath no leaves: it brancheth only when it is under water. It is ſoft, and green of colour; but being brought into the air, it becometh hard and ſhining red, as we ſee. Bac. Natural Hiſt.

This gentleman, deſirous to find the nature of coral, cauſed a man to go down a hundred fathom into the ſea, with expreſs orders to take notice whether it were hard or ſoft in the place where it groweth. Brown's Vulg. Err.

He hears the crackling ſound of coral woods,
And ſees the ſecret ſource of ſubterranean floods.
Dryden's Virgil.

——— A turret was incloſ'd
Within the wall, of alabaſter white,
And crimſon coral, for the queen of night,
Who takes in Sylvan ſports her chaſte delight. Dryd.

Or where's the ſenſe, direct or moral,
That teeth are pearl, or lips are coral? Prior.

(2.) Her infant grandame's coral next it grew;
The bells ſhe gingled, and the whiſtle blew. Pope.

Co'ral-tree. n. ſ. [corallodendron, Latin.] It is a native of America, and produces very beautiful ſcarlet flowers; but never any ſeeds in the European gardens. Miller.

Co'ralline. adj. [corallinus, Latin.] Conſiſting of coral; approaching to coral.

At ſuch time as the ſea is agitated, it takes up into itſelf terreſtrial matter of all kinds, and in particular the coralline matter, letting it fall again, as it becomes calm. Woodward.

Co'ralline. n. ſ. [from the adjective.] Coralline is a ſea-plant uſed in medicine; but much inferior to the coral in hardneſs, ſometimes greeniſh, ſometimes yellowiſh, often reddiſh, and frequently white. Hill.

In Falmouth there is a ſort of ſand, or rather coralline, that lies under the owſe. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

Co'ralloid.
Co'ralloidal. } adj. [κοραλλοειδὴς.] Reſembling coral.

Now that plants and ligneous bodies may indurate under water, without approachment of air, we have experiment in coralline, with many coralloidal concretions. Brown.

The pentadrous, columnar, coralloid bodies, that are compoſed of plates ſet lengthways of the body, and paſſing from the ſurface to the axis of it. Woodward on Foſſils.

Cora'nt. n. ſ. [courant, French.] A lofty ſprightly dance.

It is harder to dance a corant well than a jigg; ſo in converſation, even, eaſy, and agreeable, more than points of wit.
Temple.

I would as ſoon believe a widow in great grief for her huſband, becauſe I ſaw her dance a corant about his coffin. Walſh.

Co'rban. n. ſ. [קרבן] An alms-baſket; a receptacle of charity; a gift; an alms.—Corban ſtands for an offering or gift made to God, or his temple. The Jews ſometimes ſwore by corban, or the gifts offered unto God. If a man made all his fortune corban, or devoted it to God, he was forbidden to uſe it. If all that he was to give his wife, or his father and mother, was declared corban, he was no longer permitted to allow them neceſſary ſubſiſtence. Even debtors were permitted to defraud their creditors, by conſecrating their debt to God. Our Saviour reproaches the Jews, in the Goſpel, with theſe uncharitable and irreligious vows. By this word ſuch perſons were likewiſe meant as devoted themſelves to the ſervice of God and his temple. Corban ſignifies alſo the treaſury of the temple, where the offerings, which were made in money, were depoſited. Calmet.

They think to ſatisfy all obligations to duty by their corban of religion. King Charles.

Corbe. adj. [courbe, French.] Crooked.

For ſiker thy head very tottie is,
So thy corbe ſhoulder it leans amiſs. Spenſer's Paſtorals.

To climb celeſtial Silvia's chamber-window. Shakeſpeare.

Cordeli'er. n. ſ. A Franciſcan friar; ſo named from the cord which ſerves him for a cincture.

And who to aſſiſt but a grave cordelier. Prior.

CO'RDIAL. n. ſ. [from cor, the heart, Latin.] 1. A medicine that increaſes the force of the heart, or quickens the circulation. 2. Any medicine that increaſes ſtrength. A cordial, properly ſpeaking, is not always what increaſeth the force of the heart; for, by increaſing that, the animal may be weakened, as in inflammatory diſeaſes. Whatever increaſeth the natural or animal ſtrength, the force of moving the fluids and muſcles, is a cordial: theſe are ſuch ſubſtances as bring the ſerum of the blood into the propereſt condition for circulation and nutrition; as broths made of animal ſubſtances, milk, ripe fruits, and whatever is endued with a wholeſome but not pungent taſte. Arbuthnot on Aliments. 3. Any thing that comforts, gladdens, and exhilarates.

(3.) Then with ſome cordials ſeek for to appeaſe
The inward languor of my wounded heart,
And then my body ſhall have ſhortly eaſe;
But ſuch ſweet cordials paſs phyſicians art. Spenſer.

Cordials of pity give me new
For I too weak for purges grew. Cowley.

Your warrior offspring that upheld the crown,
The ſcarlet honour of your peaceful gown,
Are the moſt pleaſing objects I can find,
Charms to my ſight, and cordials to my mind. Dryd.

Co'rdial. adj. 1. Reviving; invigorating; reſtorative. 2. Sincere; hearty; proceeding from the heart; without hypocriſy.

(1.) It is a thing I make, which hath the king
Five times redeem'd from death: I do not know
What is more cordial. Shakeſp. Cymbeline.

He only took cordial waters, in which we infuſed ſometimes purgatives. Wiſeman's Surgery.

(2.) Doctrines are infuſed among Chriſtians, which are apt to obſtruct or intercept the cordial ſuperſtructing of Chriſtian life of renovation, where the foundation is duly laid. Hammond.

He with looks of cordial love,
Hung over her enamour'd. Milton.

Cordia'lity. n. ſ. [from cordial.] 1. Relation to the heart. 2. Sincerity; freedom from hypocriſy.

(1.) That the antients had any ſuch reſpects of cordiality, or reference unto the heart, will much be doubted. Brown.

Co'rdially. adv. [from cordial.] Sincerely; heartily; without hypocriſy.

Where a ſtrong inveterate love of ſin has made any doctrine or propoſition, wholly unſuitable to the heart, no argument or demonſtration, no nor miracle whatſoever, ſhall be able to bring the heart cordially to cloſe with and receive it. South's Sermons.

Coria'nder. n. ſ. [coriandrum, Latin.] A plant. The ſpecies are, 1. Greater coriander. 2. Smaller teſticulated coriander. The firſt is cultivated for the ſeeds, which are uſed in medicine: the ſecond ſort is ſeldom found. Miller.

Iſrael called the name thereof manna: and it was, like coriander ſeed, white. Exod. xiii. 31.

CO'RINTH. n. ſ. [from the city of that name in Greece.] A ſmall fruit commonly called currant.

Now will the Corinths, now the raſps ſupply
Delicious draughts. Philips.

The chief riches of Zant conſiſteth in corinths, which the inhabitants have in great quantities. Broome.

Cori'nthian Order, is generally reckoned the fourth, but by ſome the fifth, of the five orders of architecture; and is the moſt noble, rich, and delicate of them all. Vitruvius aſcribes it to Callimachus, a Corinthian ſculptor, who is ſaid to have taken the hint by paſſing by the tomb of a young lady, over which a baſket with ſome of her playthings had been placed by her nurſe, and covered with a tile; the whole having been placed over a root of acanthus. As it ſprung up, the branches encompaſſed the baſket; but arriving at the tile, bent downwards under the corners of it, forming a kind of a volute. Hence Callimachus imitated the baſket by the vaſe of his capital, the tile in the abacus, and the leaves in the volute. Villalpandus imagines the Corinthian capital to have taken its original from an order in the temple of Solomon, whoſe leaves were thoſe of the palm-tree. The capital is adorned with two rows of leaves, between which little ſtalks ariſe, of which the ſixteen volutes are formed, which ſupport the abacus. Harris.

Behind theſe figures are large columns of the Corinthian Order, adorned with fruit and flowers. Dryd.

CORK. n. ſ. [cortex, Latin; korck, Dutch.

Hic dies, anno redeunte, feſtus
Corticem aſtrictum pice dimovebit
Amphoræ fumum bibere inſtitutæ
Conſule Tullo. Hor.]

1. A glandiferous tree, in all reſpects like the ilex, excepting the bark, which, in the cork tree, is thick, ſpongy, and ſoft. Miller. The cork tree grows near the Pyrenæan hills, and in ſeveral parts of Italy, and the North of New England. Mortimer. 2. The bark of the cork tree uſed for ſtopples, or burnt into Spaniſh black. It is taken off without injury to the tree. 3. A piece of cork cut for the ſtopple of a bottle or barrel.

(3.) I pr'ythee take the cork out of thy mouth, that I may drink thy tidings. Shakeſp. As you like it.

Be ſure, nay very ſure, thy cork be good;
Then future ages ſhall of Peggy tell,
That nymph that brew'd and bottled ale ſo well. King.

Nor ſtop, for one bad cork, his butler's pay. Pope.

Co'rking-pin. n. ſ. A pin of the largeſt ſize.

Corro'sion. n. ſ. [corrodo, Latin.] The power of eating or wearing away by degrees.

Corroſion is a particular ſpecies of diſſolution of bodies, either by an acid, or a ſaline menſtruum. It is almoſt wholly deſigned for the reſolution of bodies moſt ſtrongly compacted, as bones and metals; ſo that the menſtruums here employed, have a conſiderable moment or force. Theſe liquors, whether acid or urinous, are nothing but ſalts diſſolved in a little phlegm; therefore theſe being ſolid, and conſequently containing a conſiderable quantity of matter, do both attract one another more, and are alſo more attracted by the particles of the body to be diſſolved; ſo when the more ſolid bodies are put into ſaline menſtruums, the attraction is ſtronger than in other ſolutions; and the motion, which is always proportional to the attraction, is more violent: ſo that we may eaſily conceive, when the motion is in ſuch a manner increaſed, it ſhould drive the ſalts into the pores of the bodies, and open and looſen their coheſion, though ever ſo firm. Quincy.

A kind of poiſon worketh either by corroſion, or by a ſecret malignity and enmity to nature. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

That corroſion and diſſolution of bodies, even the moſt ſolid and durable, which is vulgarly aſcribed to the air, is cauſed merely by the action of water upon them; the air being ſo far from injuring and preying upon the bodies it environs, that it contributes to their ſecurity and preſervation. Woodward.

Co'unty. n. ſ. [comte, Fr. comitatus, Lat.] 1. A ſhire; that is, a circuit or portion of the realm, into which the whole land is divided, for the adminiſtration of juſtice; ſo that there is no part of the kingdom, but what lieth within ſome county. Every county is governed by a yearly officer, called a ſheriff, who puts in execution all the commands and judgments of the king's courts. Of theſe counties four are termed county-palatines, as that of Lancaſter, Cheſter, Durham, and Ely. A county-palatine is a juriſdiction of ſo high a nature, that the chief governors of theſe, by ſpecial charter from the king, ſent out all writs in their own name, and did all things touching juſtice as abſolutely as the prince himſelf, only acknowledging him their ſuperiour and ſovereign. But this power has, by a ſtatute in Henry VIII. his time, been much abridged. There are likewiſe counties corporate, which are certain cities or ancient boroughs upon which our princes have thought good to beſtow extraordinary liberties. Of theſe London is one, York another, the city of Cheſter a third, and Canterbury a fourth. And to theſe may be added many more; as the county of the town of Kingſton upon Hull, the county of the town of Haverfordweſt, and the county of Litchfield. County is, in another ſignification, uſed for the county-court. Cowel. 2. An earldom. 3. [Compté.] A count; a lord. Now wholly obſolete.

(1.) Diſcharge your powers unto their ſeveral counties,
As we will ours. Shak. H. IV.

——— After this alliance,
Let tigers match with hinds, and wolves with ſheep,
And every creature couple with his foe. Dryd. Span. Fryar.

Couple-beggar. n. ſ. [couple and beggar.] One that makes it his buſineſs to marry beggars to each other.

No couple-beggar in the land,
E'er join'd ſuch numbers hand in hand. Swift.

Co'uplet. n. ſ. [French.] 1. Two verſes; a pair of rhymes. 2. A pair; as of doves.

(1.) Then would they caſt away their pipes, and, holding hand in hand, dance by the only cadence of their voices, which they would uſe in ſinging ſome ſhort couplets, whereto the one half beginning, the other half ſhould anſwer. Sidney.

Then at the laſt, an only couplet fraught
With ſome unmeaning thing they call a thought;
A needleſs Alexandrine ends the ſong,
That, like a wounded ſnake, drags its ſlow length along. Pope.

In Pope I cannot read a line,
But with a ſigh I wiſh it mine;
When he can in one couplet fix
More ſenſe than I can do in ſix,
It gives me ſuch a jealous fit,
I cry, pox take him and his wit. Swift.

(2.) Anon, as patient as the female dove,

——— Their diſcipline
Now mingled with their courage. Shak. Cymbel.

Hope arms their courage: from their tow'rs they throw
Their darts with double force, and drive the foe. Dryd.

Courage, that grows from conſtitution, very often forſakes a man when he has occaſion for it; and when it is only a kind of inſtinct in the ſoul, it breaks out on all occaſions, without judgment or diſcretion. That courage which ariſes from the ſenſe of our duty, and from the fear of offending Him that made us, acts always in an uniform manner, and according to the dictates of right reaſon. Addiſon's Guardian.

Nothing but the want of common courage was the cauſe of their misfortunes. Swift.

Coura'geous. adj. [from courage.] 1. Brave; daring; bold; enterpriſing; adventurous; hardy; ſtout. 2. It is uſed ludicrouſly by Shakeſpeare for outrageous.

CRY'STAL. n. ſ. [κρύσταλλος.] 1. Cryſtals are hard, pellucid, and naturally colourleſs bodies, of regularly angular figures, compoſed of ſimple, not filamentous plates, not flexile or elaſtick, giving fire with ſteel, not fermenting with acid menſtrua, and calcining in a ſtrong fire. There are many various ſpecies of it produced in different parts of the globe. Hill on Foſſils.—Iſland cryſtal is a genuine ſpar, of an extremely pure, clear, and fine texture, ſeldom either blemiſhed with flaws or ſpots, or ſtained with any other colour. A remarkable property of this body, which has much employed the writers on opticks, is its double refraction; ſo that if it be laid over a black line, drawn on paper, two lines appear in the place of one. Hill. 2. Cryſtal is alſo uſed for a factitious body caſt in the glaſshouſes, called alſo cryſtal glaſs, which is carried to a degree of perfection beyond the common glaſs; though it comes far ſhort of the whiteneſs and vivacity of the natural cryſtal. Chambers. 3. Cryſtals [in chymiſtry] expreſs ſalts or other matters ſhot or congealed in manner of cryſtal. Chambers.

(1.) Water, as it ſeems, turneth into cryſtal; as is ſeen in divers caves, where the cryſtal hangs in ſtillicidiis. Bacon.

If cryſtal be a ſtone, it is not immediately concreted by the efficacy of cold, but rather by a mineral ſpirit. Brown.

Cryſtal is certainly known, and diſtinguiſhed by the degree of its diaphaneity and of its refraction, as alſo of its hardneſs, which are ever the ſame. Woodward.

(3.) If the menſtruum be overcharged, within a ſhort time the metals will ſhoot into certain cryſtals. Bacon.

CRY'STAL. adj. 1. Conſiſting of cryſtal. 2. Bright; clear; tranſparent; lucid; pellucid.

(1.) Then, Jupiter, thou king of gods,
Thy cryſtal window ope, look out. Shakeſp. Cymbeline.

(2.) In groves we live, and lie on moſſy beds
By cryſtal ſtreams, that murmur through the meads. Dryd.

CRY'STALLINE. adj. [cryſtallinus, Latin.] 1. Conſiſting of cryſtal. 2. Bright; clear; pellucid; tranſparent.

(1.) Mount eagle to my palace cryſtalline.
Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

We provided ourſelves with ſome ſmall receivers, blown of cryſtalline glaſs. Boyle.

(2.) The clarifying of water is an experiment tending to the health; beſides the pleaſure of the eye, when water is cryſtalline. It is effected by caſting in and placing pebbles at the head of the current, that the water may ſtrain through them. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

He on the wings of cherub rode ſublime
On the cryſtalline ſky, in ſaphir thron'd
Illuſtrious far and wide. Milton.

CRY'STALLINE Humour. n. ſ. The ſecond humour of the eye, that lies immediately next to the aqueous behind the uvea, oppoſite to the papilla, nearer to the forepart than the back part of the globe. It is the leaſt of the humours, but much more ſolid than any of them. Its figure, which is convex on both ſides, reſembles two unequal ſegments of ſpheres, of which the moſt convex is on its backſide, which makes a ſmall cavity in the glaſſy humour in which it lies. It is covered with a fine coat, called aranea.

The parts of the eye are made convex, and eſpecially the cryſtalline humour, which is of a lenticular figure, convex on both ſides. Ray on the Creation.

CRYSTALLIZA'TION. n. ſ. [from cryſtallize.] 1. Congelation into cryſtals.—Such a combination of ſaline particles as reſembles the form of a cryſtal, variouſly modified, according to the nature and texture of the ſalts. The method is by diſſolving any ſaline body in water, and filtering it, to evaporate, 'till a film appear at the top, and then let it ſtand to ſhoot; and this it does by that attractive force which is in all bodies, and particularly in ſalt, by reaſon of its ſolidity: whereby, when the menſtruum or fluid, in which ſuch particles flow, is ſated enough or evaporated, ſo that the ſaline particles are within each other's attractive powers, they draw one another more than they are drawn by the fluid, then will they run into cryſtals. And this is peculiar to thoſe, that let them be ever ſo much divided and reduced into minute particles, yet when they are formed into cryſtals, they each of them reaſſume their proper ſhapes; ſo that one might as eaſily diveſt them of their ſaltneſs, as of their figure. This being an immutable and perpetual law, by knowing the figure of the cryſtals, we may underſtand what the texture of the particles ought to be, which can form thoſe cryſtals; and, on the other hand, by knowing the texture of the particles, may be determined the figure of the cryſtals. Quincy. 2. The maſs formed by congelation or concretion.

(2.) All natural metallick and mineral cryſtallizations were effected by the water, which firſt brought the particles, whereof each conſiſts, out from amongſt the matter of the ſtrata. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

To CRY'STALLIZE. v. a. [from cryſtal.] To cauſe to congeal or concrete in cryſtals.

If you diſſolve copper in aqua fortis, or ſpirit of nitre, you may, by cryſtallizing the ſolution, obtain a goodly blue. Boyle.

To CRY'STALLIZE. v. n. To coagulate; congeal; concrete; or ſhoot into cryſtals.

Recent urine will cryſtallize by inſpiſſation, and afford a ſalt neither acid nor alcaline. Arbuthn. on Aliments.

CUB. n. ſ. [of uncertain etymology.] 1. The young of a beaſt; generally of a bear or fox. 2. The young of a whale, perhaps of any viviparous fiſh. 3. In reproach or contempt, a young boy or girl.

(1.) I would outſtare the ſterneſt eyes that look,
Pluck the young ſucking cubs from the ſhe-bear. Shakeſp.

This night, wherein the cub-drawn bear would couch,
The lion, and the belly-pinched wolf,
Keep their fur dry. Shak. King Lear.

In the eagle's deſtroying one fox's cubs, there's power executed with oppreſſion. L'Eſtrange.

(2.) Two mighty whales, which ſwelling ſeas had toſt,
One as a mountain vaſt, and with her came
A cub, not much inferior to his dame. Waller.

(3.) O thou diſſembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath ſow'd a grizzle on thy caſe?
Or will not elſe thy craft ſo quickly grow,
That thine own trip ſhall be thine overthrow? Shakeſp.

O moſt comical ſight! a country ſquire, with the equipage of a wife and two daughters, came to Mr. Snipwel's ſhop laſt night; but, ſuch two unlicked cubs! Congreve.

To CUB. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth: uſed of beaſts, or of a woman in contempt.

Cub'd in a cabbin, on a mattreſs laid,
On a brown George with louſy ſwabbers fed;
Dead wine, that ſtinks of the Borrachio, ſup
From a foul jack, or greaſy maple cup. Dryd. Perſ.

CUBA'TION. n. ſ. [cubatio, Latin.] The act of lying down. Dict.

CU'BATORY. adj. [from cubo, Lat.] Recumbent. Dict.

CU'BATURE. n. ſ. [from cube.] The finding exactly the ſolid content of any propoſed body. Harris.

CUBE. n. ſ. [from κύβος, a die.] 1. [In geometry.] A regular ſolid body, conſiſting of ſix ſquare and equal faces or ſides, and the angles all right, and therefore equal. Chambers. 2. [In arithmetick.] See CUBICK Number.

(2.) All the maſter planets move about the ſun at ſeveral diſtances, as their common center, and with different velocities. This common law being obſerved in all of them, that the ſquares of the times of the revolutions are proportional to the cubes of their diſtances. Grew's Coſmol.

CUBE Root. }
CU'BICK Root. } n. ſ. The origin of a cubick number; or a number, by whoſe multiplication into itſelf, and again into the product, any given number is formed: thus two is the cube-root of eight. Chambers.

CU'BEB. n. ſ. A ſmall dried fruit reſembling pepper, but ſomewhat longer, of a greyiſh-brown colour on the ſurface. It has an aromatick ſmell, and is acrid to the taſte. Cubebs are brought from Java. Hill.

Aromaticks, as cubebs, cinnamon, and nutmegs, are uſually put into crude poor wines, to give them more oily ſpirits. Floyer on the Humours.

CU'BICAL. }
CU'BICK. } adj. [from cube.] 1. Having the form or properties of a cube. 2. It is applied to numbers.

(1.) A cloſe veſſel, containing ten cubical feet of air, will not ſuffer a wax-candle of an ounce to burn in it above an hour before it be ſuffocated. Wilkins's Math. Mag.

It is above a hundred to one, againſt any particular throw, that you do not caſt any given ſet of faces with four cubical dice; becauſe there are ſo many ſeveral combinations of the ſix faces of four dice. Bentley's Serm.

(2.) The number of four, multiplied into itſelf, produceth the ſquare number of ſixteen; and that again multiplied by four, produceth the cubick number of ſixty-four. If we ſhould ſuppoſe a multitude actually infinite, there muſt be infinite roots, and ſquare and cubick numbers; yet, of neceſſity, the root is but the fourth part of the ſquare, and the ſixteenth part of the cubick number. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The number of ten hath been as highly extolled, as containing even, odd, long and plain, quadrate and cubical numbers. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CU'BICALNESS. n. ſ. [from cubical.] The ſtate or quality of being cubical.

CUBI'CULARY. adj. [cubiculum, Latin.] Fitted for the poſture of lying down.

Cuſtom, by degrees, changed their cubiculary beds into diſcubitory, and introduced a faſhion to go from the baths unto theſe. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CU'BIFORM. adj. [from cube and form.] Of the ſhape of a cube.

CU'BIT. n. ſ. [from cubitus, Latin.] A meaſure in uſe among the ancients; which was originally the diſtance from the elbow, bending inwards, to the extremity of the middle finger. This meaſure is the fourth part of a well proportioned man's ſtature. Some fix the Hebrew cubit at twenty inches and a half, Paris meaſure; and others at eighteen. Calmet.

From the tip of the elbow to the end of the long finger, is half a yard and a quarter of the ſtature, and makes a cubit; the firſt meaſure we read of, the ark of Noah being framed and meaſured by cubits. Holder on Time.

Meaſur'd by cubit, length, and breadth, and height. Milton.

The Jews uſed two ſorts of cubits; the ſacred, and the prophane or common one. Arbuthn. on Meaſures.

When on the goddeſs firſt I caſt my ſight,
Scarce ſeem'd her ſtature of a cubit height. Pope.

CU'BITAL. adj. [cubitalis, Latin.] Containing only the length of a cubit.

The watchmen of Tyre might be well called pygmies, the towers of that city being ſo high, that, unto men below, they appeared in a cubital ſtature. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CU'CKINGSTOOL. n. ſ. An engine invented for the puniſhment of ſcolds and unquiet women, which, in ancient times, was called tumbrel. Cowel.

Theſe mounted on a chair-curule,
Which moderns call a cucking-ſtool,
March proudly to the river's ſide. Hudibras.

CU'CKOLD. n. ſ. [cocu, Fr. from coukoo.] One that is married to an adultreſs; one whoſe wife is falſe to his bed.

But for all the whole world; why, who would not make her huſband a cuckold, to make him a monarch? I ſhould venture purgatory for't. Shakeſp. Othello.

——— There have been,
Or I am much deceiv'd, cuckolds ere now;
And many a man there is, ev'n at this preſent,
Now while I ſpeak this, holds his wife by th' arm,
That little thinks ſhe has been ſluic'd in's abſence. Shakeſp.

For though the law makes null th' adulterer's deed
Of lands, to her the cuckold may ſucceed. Dryd. Juv.

Ever ſince the reign of king Charles II. the alderman is made a cuckold, the deluded virgin is debauched, and adultery and fornication are committed behind the ſcenes. Swift.

CU'CKOO. n. ſ. [cuculus, Latin; cwccw, Welſh; cocu, French; kockock, Dutch.] 1. A bird which appears in the Spring; and is ſaid to ſuck the eggs of other birds, and lay her own to be hatched in their place; from which practice, it was uſual to alarm a huſband at the approach of an adulterer by calling cuckoo, which, by miſtake, was in time applied to the huſband. This bird is remarkable for the uniformity of his note, from which his name in moſt tongues ſeems to have been formed. 2. It is a name of contempt.

(1.) Finding Mopſa, like a cuckoo by a nightingale, alone with Pamela, I came in. Sidney.

The merry cuckoo, meſſenger of Spring,
His trumpet ſhrill hath thrice already ſounded. Spenſer.

The plainſong cuckoo gray,
Whoſe note full many a man doth mark,
And dares not anſwer, nay. Shakeſp.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night:
Take heed ere Summer comes, or cuckoo birds affright.
Shakeſpeare.

———— I deduce,
From the firſt note the hollow cuckoo ſings,
The ſymphony of Spring; and touch a theme
Unknown to fame, the paſſion of the grove. Thomſon.

(2.) Why, what a raſcal art thou then, to praiſe him ſo for running?——
—A horſeback, ye cuckoo;——but a-foot, he will not budge a foot. Shak. Henry IV.

(1.) ——— Merciful pow'rs!
Reſtrain in me the curſed thoughts that nature
Gives way to in repoſe. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

(2.) Come lady, while heav'n lends us grace,
Let us fly this curſed place,
Leſt the ſorcerer us entice
With ſome other new device;
Not a waſte or needleſs ſound,
'Till we come to holier ground. Milton.

(3.) This curſed quarrel be no more renew'd;
Be, as becomes a wife, obedient ſtill;
Though griev'd, yet ſubject to her huſband's will. Dryden.

One day, I think, in Paradiſe he liv'd;
Deſtin'd the next his journey to purſue,
Where wounding thorns and curſed thiſtles grew. Prior.

Cu'rsedly. adv. [from curſed.] Miſerably; ſhamefully: a low cant word.

Satisfaction and reſtitution lies ſo curſedly hard on the gizzards of our publicans. L'Eſtrange.

Sure this is a nation that is curſedly afraid of being over-run with too much politeneſs, and cannot regain one great genius but at the expence of another. Pope.

Cu'rsedness. n. ſ. [from curſed.] The ſtate of being under a curſe.

Cu'rship. n. ſ. [from cur.] Dogſhip; meanneſs; ſcoundrelſhip.

Her mouth ſhe writh'd her forehead taught to frown,
Her eyes to ſparkle fires to love unknown;
Her ſallow cheeks her envious mind did ſhew,
And ev'ry feature ſpoke aloud the curſtneſs of a ſhrew.
Dryden.

CURT. adj. [from curtus, Latin.] Short.

To CU'RTAIL. v. a. [curto, Latin. It was anciently written curtal, which perhaps is more proper; but dogs that had their tails cut, being called curtal dogs, the word was vulgarly conceived to mean originally to cut the tail, and was in time written according to that notion.] 1. To cut off; to cut ſhort; to ſhorten. 2. It has of before the thing cut off.

(1.) I, that am curtail'd of all fair proportion,
Deform'd, unfiniſh'd, ſent before my time
Into this breathing world. Shakeſp. Richard III.

Then why ſhould we ourſelves abridge,
And curtail our own privilege? Hudibras.

Scribblers ſend us over their traſh in proſe and verſe, with abominable curtailings and quaint moderniſms. Swift.

This general employ, and expence of their time, would as aſſuredly curtail and retrench the ordinary means of knowledge and erudition, as it would ſhorten the opportunities of vice. Woodward.

Perhaps this humour of ſpeaking no more than we muſt, has ſo miſerably curtailed ſome of our words; and, in familiar writings and converſations, they often loſe all but their firſt ſyllables. Addiſon, Spectator.

(2.) The count aſſured the court, that Fact his antagoniſt had taken a wrong name, having curtailed it of three letters; for that his name was not Fact, but Faction. Addiſon.

CU'RTAIL Dog. n. ſ. A dog lawed, or mutilated, according to the foreſt laws, whoſe tail is cut off, and who is therefore hindered in courſing. Perhaps this word may be the original of cur.

I, amazed, ran from her as a witch; and I think, if my breaſt had not been made of faith, and my heart of ſteel, ſhe had transformed me to a curtail dog, and made me turn i' th' wheel. Shakeſpeare's Comedy of Errours.

CU'RTAIN. n. ſ. [cortina, Latin.] 1. A cloath contracted or expanded at pleaſure, to admit or exclude the light; to conceal or diſcover any thing; to ſhade a bed; to darken a room. 2. To draw the CURTAIN. To cloſe it ſo as to ſhut out the light, or conceal the object. 3. To open it ſo as to diſcern the object. 4. [In fortification.] That part of the wall or rampart that lies between two baſtions. Military Dict.

(1.) Their curtains ought to be kept open, ſo as to renew the air. Arbuthnot on Diet.

So through white curtains ſhot a tim'rous ray,
And op'd thoſe eyes that muſt eclipſe the day. Pope.

Thy hand, great dulneſs! let's the curtain fall,
And univerſal darkneſs buries all. Pope.

(2.) I muſt draw a curtain before the work for a while, and keep your patience a little in ſuſpence. Burnet's Theory.

Once more I write to you, and this once will be the laſt: the curtain will ſoon be drawn between my friend and me, and nothing left but to wiſh you a long good night. Pope.

(3.) So ſoon as the all-cheering ſun
Should in the fartheſt Eaſt begin to draw
The ſhady curtain from Aurora's bed.
Shakeſpeare's Rom. and Jul.

Let them ſleep, let them ſleep on,
'Till this ſtormy night be gone;
And th' eternal morrow dawn,
Then the curtain will be drawn. Craſhaw.

(4.) The governour, not diſcouraged, ſuddenly of timber and boards raiſed up a curtain twelve foot high, at the back of his ſoldiers. Knolles.

CURTAIN-LECTURE. n. ſ. [from curtain and lecture.] A reproof given by a wife to her huſband in bed.

What endleſs brawls by wives are bred!
The curtain-lecture makes a mournful bed. Dryden's Juv.

She ought to exert the authority of the curtain-lecture, and, if ſhe finds him of a rebellious diſpoſition, to tame him. Addiſon.

To CU'RTAIN. v. a. [from the noun.] To incloſe or accommodate with curtains.

Now o'er one half the world
Nature ſeems dead, and wicked dreams abuſe
The curtain'd ſleep. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

The wand'ring prince and Dido,
When with a happy ſtorm they were ſurpriz'd,
And curtain'd with a counſel-keeping cave. Shakeſp.

But in her temple's laſt receſs incloſ'd,
On dulneſs' lap th' anointed head repoſ'd,
Him cloſe ſhe curtain'd round with vapours blew,
And ſoft beſprinkled with Cimmerian dew. Pope.

CU'STOM. n. ſ. [couſtume, French.] 1. Habit ; habitual practice. 2. Faſhion ; common way of acting. 3. Eſtabliſhed manner. 4. Practiſe of buying of certain perſons. 5. Application from buyers : as, this trader has good cuſtom. 6. [In law.] A law or right, not written, which, being eſtabliſhed by long uſe, and the conſent of our anceſtors, has been, and is, daily practiſed. We cannot ſay that this or that is a cuſtom, except we can juſtify that it hath continued ſo one hundred years ; yet, becauſe that is hard to prove, it is enough for the proof of a cuſtom, if two or more can depoſe that they heard their fathers ſay, that it was a cuſtom all their time ; and that their fathers heard their fathers alſo ſay, that it was likewiſe a cuſtom in their time. If it is to be proved by record, the continuance of a hundred years will ſerve. Cuſtom is either general or particular : general, that which is current through England ; particular is that which belongs to this or that country ; as gavelkind to Kent, or this or that lordſhip, city, or town. Cuſtom differs from preſcription ; for cuſtom is common to more, and preſcription is particular to this or that man : preſcription may be for a far ſhorter time than cuſtom. Cowel. 7. Tribute ; tax paid for goods imported, or exported.

(1.) Blood and deſtruction ſhall be ſo in uſe,
That mothers ſhall but ſmile, when they behold
Their infants quarter'd by the hands of war ;

Da'irymaid. n. ſ. [dairy and maid.] The woman ſervant whoſe buſineſs is to manage the milk.

The pooreſt of the ſex have ſtill an itch,
To know their fortunes, equal to the rich:
The dairymaid enquires if ſhe ſhall take
The truſty taylor, and the cook forſake. Dryden.

Come up quickly, or we ſhall conclude that thou art in love with one of Sir Roger's dairymaids. Addiſon.

Da'isy. n. ſ. [ꝺæᵹeꞅeaᵹe, day's eye. Chaucer.] A Spring-flower.

It hath a perennial root: the ſtalks are naked, and never branch out: the cup of the flower is ſcaly and ſimple, divided into many ſegments to the foot-ſtalk. The flowers are radiated; and the heads, after the petals are fallen off, reſemble obtuſe cones. Miller.

When daiſies pied, and violets blue,
And lady ſmocks all over white,
And cuckow buds of yellow hue,
Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shakeſpeare.

As he paſſed, the woods put forth their bloſſoms, the earth her primroſes and days-eyes to behold him. Howel.

Now hawthorns bloſſom, now the daiſies ſpring;
Now leaves the trees, and flow'rs adorn the ground. Pope.

This will find thee picking of daiſies, or ſmelling to a lock of hay. Addiſon.

Fair-handed Spring unboſoms every grace;
The daiſy, primroſe, violet. Thomſon.

Dale. n. ſ. [dalei, Gothick; dal, Dutch and German.] A low place between hills; a vale; a valley.

Long toſt with ſtorms, and beat with bitter winds,
High over hills, and low adown the dale,
She wandred many a wood and meaſur'd many a vale. Fairy Queen.

Before the downfal of the fairy ſtate
This dale, a pleaſing region, not unbleſt,
This dale poſſeſs'd they, and had ſtill poſſeſs'd. Tickell.

Da'lliance. n. ſ. [from dally.] 1. Interchange of careſſes; acts of fondneſs. 2. Conjugal converſation. 3. Delay; procraſtination.

(1.) Look thou be true: do not give dalliance
Too much the rein: the ſtrongeſt oaths are ſtraw
To th' fire i' th' blood. Shakeſp. Tempeſt.

Nor gentle purpoſe, nor endearing ſmiles
Wanted; nor youthful dalliance, as beſeems
Fair couple, link'd in happy nuptial league,
Alone as they. Milton.

——— I'll head my people;
Then think of dalliance when the danger's o'er:
My warlike ſpirits work now another way,
And my ſoul's tun'd to trumpets. Dryden.

(2.) The giant, ſelf-diſmayed with the ſound,
Where he with his Dueſſa dalliance found,
In haſte came ruſhing forth from inner bow'r. Fairy Queen.

That bower not myſtick, where the ſapient king
Held dalliance with his fair Egyptian ſpouſe. Milton.

——— Thou claim'ſt me for thy ſire,
And my fair ſon here ſhow'ſt me, the dear pledge
Of dalliance had with thee in heav'n. Milton.

(3.) Both wind and tide ſtay for this gentleman;
And I, to blame, have held him here too long.—
—Good lord, you uſe this dalliance to excuſe
Your breach of promiſe. Shakeſpeare.

Da'llier. n. ſ. [from dally.] A trifler; a fondler.

The daily dalliers with pleaſant words, with ſmiling countenances, and with wagers, purpoſed to be loſt, before they were purpoſed to be made. Aſcham.

Da'llop. n. ſ. [of unknown etymology.] A tuft, or clump: not in uſe.

Of barley the fineſt and greeneſt ye find,
Leave ſtanding in dallops 'till time ye do bind. Tuſſer.

To DA'LLY. v. n. [dollen, Dutch, to trifle.] 1. To trifle; to play the fool; to amuſe one's ſelf with idle play; to loſe time in trifles; to procraſtinate idly. 2. To exchange careſſes; to play the wanton; to fondle. 3. To ſport; to play; to frolick. 4. To delay.

(1.) ——— Take up thy maſter:
If thou ſhould'ſt dally half an hour, his life,
With thine, and all that offer to defend him,
Stand in aſſured loſs. Shakeſp. King Lear.

He left his cur, and laying hold
Upon his arms, with courage bold
Cried out, 'tis now no time to dally,
The enemy begin to rally. Hudibras.

We have trifled too long already: it is madneſs to dally any longer, when our ſouls are at ſtake. Calamy's Sermons.

One hundred thouſand pounds muſt be raiſed; for there is no dallying with hunger. Swift.

(2.) He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation;
Not dallying with a brace of courtezans,
But meditating with two deep divines. Shakeſpeare.

(3.) She her airie buildeth in the cedar's top,
And dallies with the wind, and ſcorns the ſun. Shakeſp.

(4.) They that would not be reformed by that correction, wherein he dallied with them, ſhall feel a judgment worthy of God. Wiſd. xii. 26.

To Da'lly. v. a. To put off; to delay; to amuſe till a proper opportunity.

He ſet down to perform ſervice; not by the hazard of one ſet battle, but by dallying off the time with often ſkirmiſhes. Knolles's Hiſtory.

Dam. n. ſ. [from dame, which formerly ſignified mother. Had Nero never been an emperour, ſhulde never his dame have be ſlaine. Chaucer.] 1. The mother: uſed of beaſts, or other animals not human. 2. A human mother: in contempt or deteſtation.

(1.) The dam runs lowing up and down,
Looking the way her harmleſs young one went,
And can do nought but wail her darling loſs. Shakeſp.

Mother, ſays a ſick kite, let me have your prayers: Alas, my child, ſays the dam, which of the gods ſhall I go to? L'Eſtrange.

Birds bring but one morſel of meat at a time, and have not fewer, it may be, than ſeven or eight young in the neſt together, which, at the return of their dams, do all at once, with equal greedineſs, hold up their heads and gape. Ray.

(2.) ——— This brat is none of mine;
It is the iſſue of Polixena:
Hence with it, and, together with the dam,
Commit them to the fire. Shakeſp. Winter's Tale.

Dam. n. ſ. [dam, Dutch.] A mole or bank to confine water.

As when the ſea breaks o'er its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds,
Thoſe banks and dams, that like a ſkreen
Did keep it out, now keep it in. Hudibras.

Not with ſo fierce a rage the foaming flood
Roars, when he finds his rapid courſe withſtood;
Bears down the dams with unreſiſted ſway,
And ſweeps the cattle and the cots away. Dryden.

Let looſe the reins to all your wat'ry ſtore,
Bear down the dams, and open every door. Dryden.

The inſide of the dam muſt be very ſmooth and ſtreight; and if it is made very ſloping on each ſide, it is the better. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

To DAM. v. a. [ꝺemman, ꝼoꞃeꝺemman, Saxon; dammen, Dut.] 1. To confine, or ſhut up water by moles or dams. 2. It is uſed by Shakeſpeare of fire, and by Milton of light.

(1.) I'll have the current in this place damm'd up;
And here the ſmug and ſilver Trent ſhall run
In a new channel, fair and evenly. Shakeſp. Henry VI.

——— Home I would go,
But that my doors are hateful to my eyes,
Fill'd and damm'd up with gaping creditors,
Watchful as fowlers when their game will ſpring. Otway.

Boggy lands are fed by ſprings, pent by a weight of earth, that dams in the water, and cauſes it to ſpread. Mortimer.

'Tis you muſt drive that trouble from your ſoul;
As ſtreams, when damm'd, forget their ancient current,
And wond'ring at their banks in other channels flow. Smith.

(2.) The more thou damm'ſt it up, the more it burns. Shakeſpeare.

Moon! if your influence be quite damm'd up
With black uſurping miſts, ſome gentle taper,
Though a ruſh-candle from the wicker hole
Of ſome clay habitation, viſit us
With thy long levell'd rule of ſtreaming light. Milton.

DA'MAGE. n. ſ. [domage, French.] 1. Miſchief, hurt; detriment. 2. Loſs; miſchief ſuffered. 3. The value of miſchief done. 4. Reparation of damage; retribution. 5. In law.

(1.) Groſs errours and abſurdities many commit for want of a friend to tell them of them, to the great damage both of their fame and fortune. Bacon.

Such as were ſent from thence did commonly do more hurt and damage to the Engliſh ſubjects than to the Iriſh enemies, by their continual ceſs and extortion. Davies.

He repulſed the enemy very much to their damage. Clarendon.

(2.) ——— His heart exalts him in the harm
Already done, to have diſpeopled heav'n,
My damage fondly deem'd! Milton.

(3.) They believed that they were not able, though they ſhould be willing to ſell all they have in Ireland, to pay the damages which had been ſuſtained by the war. Clarendon.

(4.) The biſhop demanded reſtitution of the ſpoils taken by the Scots, or damages for the ſame. Bacon.

Tell me whether, upon exhibiting the ſeveral particulars which I have related to you, I may not ſue her for damages in a court of juſtice? Addiſon.

(5.) Any hurt or hindrance that a man taketh in his eſtate. In the common law it particularly ſignifies a part of what the jurors be to inquire of; for, after verdict given of the principal cauſe, they are likewiſe aſked their conſciences touching coſts, which are the charges of ſuit, and damages, which contain the hindrance which the plaintiff or demandant hath ſuffered, by means of the wrong done him by the defendant or tenant. Cowel.

When the judge had awarded due damages to a perſon, into whoſe field a neighbour's oxen had broke, it is reported that he reverſed his own ſentence, when he heard that the oxen, which had done this miſchief, were his own. Watts.

To Da'mage. v. a. [from the noun.] To miſchief; to injure; to impair; to hurt; to harm.

I conſider time as an immenſe ocean, into which many noble authors are entirely ſwallowed up, many very much ſhattered and damaged, ſome quite disjointed and broken into pieces. Addiſon.

To Da'mage. v. n. To take damage, or be damaged.

Da'mageable. adj. [from damage.] 1. Suſceptible of hurt; as, damageable goods. 2. Miſchievous; pernicious.

(2.) Obſcene and immodeſt talk is offenſive to the purity of God, damageable and infectious to the innocence of our neighbours, and moſt pernicious to ourſelves. Gov. of the Tongue.

Da'mascene. n. ſ. [damaſcenus, from Damaſcus.] A ſmall plum; a Damſon, as it is now ſpoken.

In April follow the cherry tree in bloſſom, the damaſcene and plum trees in bloſſom, and the white thorn in leaf. Bacon.

In fruits the white commonly is meaner, as in pear plums and damaſcenes; and the choiceſt plums are black. Bacon.

DA'MASK. n. ſ. [damaſquin, French; damaſchino, Ital. from Damaſcus.] 1. Linen or ſilk woven in a manner invented at Damaſcus, by which part, by a various direction of the threads, exhibits flowers or other forms. 2. It is uſed for red colour in Fairfax, from the damaſk roſe.

(1.) Not any weaver which his work doth boaſt
In diaper, damaſk, or in lyne. Spenſer.

(2.) That which he continues ignorant of, having done the utmoſt lying in his power, that he might not be ignorant of it, ſhall not damn him. South's Sermons.

(3.) ——— His own impartial thought
Will damn, and conſcience will record the fault. Dryden.
(4.) They damn themſelves, nor will my muſe deſcend
To clap with ſuch who fools and knaves commend. Dryden.
——— For the great dons of wit,
Phœbus gives them full privilege alone
To damn all others, and cry up their own. Dryden.

You are ſo good a critick, that it is the greateſt happineſs of the modern poets that you do not hear their works; and next, that you are not ſo arrant a critick as to damn them, like the reſt, without hearing. Pope.

Da'mnable. adj. [from damn.] 1. Deſerving damnation; juſtly doomed to never-ending puniſhment. 2. It is ſometimes indecently uſed in a low and ludicrous ſenſe; odious; pernicious.

(1.) It gives him occaſion of labouring with greater earneſtneſs elſewhere, to entangle unwary minds with the ſnares of his damnable opinion. Hooker.

He's a creature unprepar'd, unmeet for death;
And, to tranſport him in the mind he is,
Were damnable. Shakeſp. Meaſure for Meaſure.

As he does not reckon every ſchiſm of a damnable nature, ſo he is far from cloſing with the new opinion of thoſe who make it no crime. Swift.

(2.) Oh thou damnable fellow! did not I pluck thee by the noſe for thy ſpeeches? Shakeſp. Meaſure for Meaſure.

Da'mnably. adv. [from damnable.] 1. In ſuch a manner as to incur eternal puniſhment; ſo as to be excluded from mercy. 2. It is indecently uſed in a ludicrous ſenſe; odiouſly; hatefully.

(1.) We will propoſe the queſtion, whether thoſe who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Chriſt damnably, in reſpect of thoſe conſequences that ariſe from them? South's Sermons.

(2.) The more ſweets they beſtowed upon them, the more damnably their conſerves ſtunk. Dennis.

Damna'tion. n. ſ. [from damn.] Excluſion from divine mercy; condemnation to eternal puniſhment.

(1.) ——— Night; not now, as ere man fell,
Wholſom and cool, and mild; but with black air
Accompany'd, with damps and dreadful gloom. Milton.

A rift there was, which from the mountain's height
Convey'd a glimmering and malignant light,
A breathing-place to draw the damps away,
A twilight of an intercepted day. Dryden.

(2.) The heat of the ſun in the hotter ſeaſons, penetrating the exterior parts of the earth, excites thoſe mineral exhalations in ſubterraneous caverns, which are called damps: theſe ſeldom happen but in the ſummer-time, when the hotter the weather is, the more frequent are the damps. Woodward.

(3.) Adam, by this from the cold ſudden damp
Recov'ring, and his ſcatter'd ſpirits return'd,
To Michael thus his humble words addreſs'd. Milton.

His name ſtruck every where ſo great a damp,
As Archimedes through the Roman camp. Roſcommon.

DEAN. n. ſ. [decanus, Latin; doyen, French.] From the Greek word δέκα; in Engliſh, ten; becauſe he was anciently ſet over ten canons or prebendaries at leaſt in ſome cathedral church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

As there are two foundations of cathedral churches in England, the old and the new, (the new are thoſe which Henry VIII. upon ſuppreſſion of abbeys, transformed from abbot or prior, and convent to dean and chapter) ſo there are two means of creating theſe deans; for thoſe of the old foundation are brought to their dignity much like biſhops, the king firſt ſending out his Congé d'elire to the chapter, the chapter then chuſing and the biſhop confirming them, and giving his mandate to inſtal them. Thoſe of the new foundation are, by a ſhorter courſe, inſtalled by virtue of the king's letters patents, without either election or confirmation.

This word is alſo applied to divers, that are chief of certain peculiar churches or chapels; as the dean of the king's chapel, the dean of the Arches, the dean of St. George's chapel at Windſor, and the dean of Bocking in Eſſex. Cowel.

The dean and canons, or prebends of cathedral churches, were of great uſe in the church: they were not only to be of counſel with the biſhop for his revenue, but chiefly for government in cauſes eccleſiaſtical. Uſe your beſt means to prefer ſuch to thoſe places who are fit for that purpoſe. Bacon.

From whence 'tis plain the diadem,
That princes wear, derives from them. Swift.

(2.) —————— A crown,
Golden in ſhew, is but a wreath of thorns;
Brings dangers, troubles, cares, and ſleepleſs nights,
To him who wears the regal diadem. Milton.

Why ſhould he raviſh then that diadem
From your grey temples, which the hand of time

Faction, that once made diadems her prey,
And ſtopt our prince in his triumphant way,
Fled like a miſt before this radiant day. Roſcommon.

Diade'med. adj [from diadem.] Adorned with a diadem; crowned.

Not ſo, when diadem'd with rays divine,
Touch'd with the flame that breaks from virtue's ſhrine,
Her prieſtleſs muſe forbids the good to die,
And opes the temple of eternity. Pope.

Di'adrom. n. ſ. [διαδρομέω] The time in which any motion is performed; the time in which a pendulum performs its vibration

A gry is one tenth of a line, a line one tenth of one inch, an inch one tenth of a philoſophical foot, a philoſophical foot one third of a pendulum; whoſe diadroms, in the latitude of forty-five degrees, are each equal to one ſecond of time, or a ſixtieth of a minute. Locke.

Diæ'resis. n. ſ. [διαίρεσις.] The ſeparation or disjunction of ſyllables; as aër.

Diagno'stick. n. ſ. [διαγινώσκω.] A ſymptom by which a diſeaſe is diſtinguiſhed from others.

I ſhall lay down ſome indiſputable marks of this vice, that whenever we ſee the tokens, we may conclude the plague is in the houſe:—let us hear your diagnoſticks. Collier on Pride.

One of our phyſicians proved diſappointed of his prognoſticks, or rather diagnoſticks. Harvey on Conſumptions.

DIA'GONAL. adj. [διαγώνιος.] Reaching from one angle to another, ſo as to divide a parallelogram into equal parts.

The monſtroſity of the badger is ill-contrived, and with ſome diſadvantage; the ſhortneſs being fixed unto the legs of one ſide, that might have been more properly placed upon the diagonal movers. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

All ſorts of ſtone compoſed of granules, will cut and rive in any direction, as well in a perpendicular, or in a diagonal, as horizontally and parallel to the ſide of the ſtrata. Woodward.

Dia'gonal. n. ſ. [from the adjective.] A line drawn from angle to angle, and dividing a ſquare into equal parts.

When a man has in his mind the idea of two lines, viz. the ſide and diagonal of a ſquare, whereof the diagonal is an inch long, he may have the idea alſo of the diviſion of that line into a certain number of equal parts. Locke.

Dia'gonally. adv. [from diagonal.] In a diagonal direction.

The right and left are not defined by philoſophers according to common acceptation, that is, reſpectively from one man unto another, or any conſtant ſite in each, as though that ſhould be the right in one, which, upon confront or facing, ſtands athwart or diagonally unto the other; but were diſtinguiſhed, according unto their activity and predominant locomotion, on the either ſide. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Di'agram. n. ſ. [διάγραμμα.] A delineation of geometrical figures; a mathematical ſcheme.

Many a fair precept in poetry is like a ſeeming demonſtration in the mathematicks; very ſpecious in the diagram, but failing in the mechanick operation. Dryden.

Why do not theſe perſons make a diagram of theſe cogitative lines and angles, and demonſtrate their properties of perception and appetite, as plainly as we know the other properties of triangles and circles? Bentley.

Diagry'diates. n. ſ. [from diagrydium, Latin.] Strong purgatives made with diagrydium.

All cholerick humours ought to be evacuated by diagrydiates, mixed with tartar, or ſome acid, or rhubarb powder. Floyer.

DI'AL. n. ſ. [diale, Skinner.] A plate marked with lines, where a hand or ſhadow ſhows the hour.

O, gentlemen, the time of life is ſhort:
To ſpend that ſhortneſs baſely were too long,
Though life did ride upon a dial's point,
Still ending at th' arrival of an hour. Shakeſp. Henry IV.

If the motion be very ſlow, we perceive it not: we have no ſenſe of the accretive motion of plants or animals; and the ſly ſhadow ſteals away upon the dial, and the quickeſt eye can diſcover no more but that it is gone. Glanville.

Dial-plate. n. ſ. [dial and plate.] That on which hours or lines are marked.

Strada tells us that the two friends, being each of them poſſeſſed of a magnetical needle, made a kind of dial-plate, inſcribing it with the four and twenty letters, in the ſame manner as the hours of the day are marked upon the ordinary dial-plate. Addiſon, Spectator.

DIALE'CT. n. ſ. [διάλεκτος.] 1. The ſubdiviſion of a language; as the Attick, Dorick, Ionick, Æolick dialects. 2. Style: manner of expreſſion. 3. Language; ſpeech.

(2.) When themſelves do practiſe that whereof they write, they change their dialect; and thoſe words they ſhun, as if there were in them ſome ſecret ſting. Hooker.

(3.) —————— In her youth
There is a prone and ſpeechleſs dialect,
Such as moves men. Shakeſpeare's Meaſure for Meaſure.

If the conferring of a kindneſs did not bind the perſon, upon whom it was conferred, to the returns of gratitude, why, in the univerſal dialect of the world, are kindneſſes ſtill called obligations? South.

Diale'ctical. adj. [from dialectick.] Logical; argumental.

Thoſe dialectical ſubtleties that the ſchoolmen employ about phyſiological myſteries, more declare the wit of him that uſes them, than increaſe the knowledge of ſober lovers of truth. Boyle.

DIALE'CTICK. n. ſ. [διαλεκτικὴ.] Logick; the act of reaſoning.

Dia'lling. n. ſ. [from dial.] The ſciaterick ſcience; the knowledge of ſhadow; the act of conſtructing dials on which the ſhadow may ſhow the hour.

Dia'list. n. ſ. [from dial.] A conſtructer of dials.

Scientifick dialiſts, by the geometrick conſiderations of lines, have found out rules to mark out the irregular motion of the ſhadow in all latitudes, and on all planes. Moxon.

Dia'logist. n. ſ. [from dialogue.] A ſpeaker in a dialogue or conference; a writer of dialogues.

DI'ALOGUE. n. ſ. [διάλογος.] A conference; a converſation between two or more, either real or feigned.

Will you hear the dialogue that the two learned men have compiled in praiſe of the owl and cuckow? Shakeſpeare.

Oh, the impudence of this wicked ſex! Laſcivious dialogues are innocent with you. Dryden's Spaniſh Fryar.

In eaſy dialogues is Fletcher's praiſe;
He mov'd the mind, but had not pow'r to raiſe. Dryden.

To Di'alogue. v. a. [from the noun.] To diſcourſe with another; to confer.

Do'ſt dialogue with thy ſhadow? Shakeſpeare's Timon.

Dyaly'sis. n. ſ. [διάλυσις.] The figure in rhetorick by which ſyllables or words are divided.

DIA'METER. n. ſ. [διὰ and μέτρον.] The line, which paſſing through the centre of a circle, or other curvilinear figure, divides it into equal parts.

The ſpace between the earth and the moon, according to Ptolemy, is ſeventeen times the diameter of the earth, which makes, in a groſs account, about one hundred and twenty thouſand miles. Raleigh.

The bay of Naples is the moſt delightful one that I ever ſaw: it lies in almoſt a round figure of about thirty miles in the diameter. Addiſon on Italy.

Dia'metral. adj. [from diameter.] Deſcribing the diameter; relating to the diameter.

Dia'metrally. adv. [from diametral.] According to the direction of a diameter; in direct oppoſition.

Chriſtian piety is, beyond all other things, diametrally oppoſed to profaneneſs and impiety of actions. Hammond.

Diame'trical. adj. [from diameter.] 1. Deſcribing a diameter. 2. Obſerving the direction of a diameter.

(2.) The ſin of calumny is ſet in a moſt diametrical oppoſition to the evangelical precept of loving our neighbours as ourſelves. Government of the Tongue.

Diame'trically. adv. [from diametrical.] In a diametrical direction.

He perſuaded the king to conſent to what was diametrically againſt his conſcience and his honour, and, in truth, his ſecurity. Clarendon.

Thus intercepted in its paſſage, the vapour, which cannot penetrate the ſtratum diametrically, glides along the lower ſurface of it, permeating the horizontal interval, which is betwixt the ſaid denſe ſtratum and that which lies underneath it. Woodward.

Di'amond. n. ſ. [diamant, Fr. adamas, Lat.]

The diamond, the moſt valuable and hardeſt of all the gems, is, when pure, perfectly clear and pellucid as the pureſt water; and is eminently diſtinguiſhed from all other ſubſtances by its vivid ſplendour, and the brightneſs of its reflexions. It is extremely various in ſhape and ſize, being found in the greateſt quantity very ſmall, and the larger ones extremely ſeldom met with. The largeſt ever known is that in the poſſeſſion of the Great Mogul, which weighs two hundred and ſeventy-nine carats, and is computed to be worth ſeven hundred and ſeventy-nine thouſand two hundred and forty-four pounds. The diamond bears the force of the ſtrongeſt fires, except the concentrated ſolar rays, without hurt; and even that infinitely fierceſt of all fires does it no injury, unleſs directed to its weaker parts. It bears a glaſs-houſe fire for many days, and if taken carefully out and ſuffered to cool by degrees, is found as bright and beautiful as before; but if taken haſtily out, it will ſometimes crack, and even ſplit into two or three pieces. The places where we have diamonds are the Eaſt-Indies and the Braſils; and though they are uſually found clear and colourleſs, yet they are ſometimes ſlightly tinged with the colours of the other gems, by the mixture of ſome metalline particles. Hill on Foſſils.

Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner;
Or, for the diamond, the chain you promiſed. Shakeſpeare.

I ſee how thine eye would emulate the diamond: thou haſt the right arched bent of the brow. Shakeſpeare.

The diamond is preferable and vaſtly ſuperior to all others in luſtre and beauty; as alſo in hardneſs, which renders it more durable and laſting, and therefore much more valuable than any other ſtone. Woodward.

The diamond is by mighty monarchs worn,
Fair as the ſtar that uſhers in the morn. Blackmore.

The lively diamond drinks thy pureſt rays,
Collected light, compact. Thomſon.

Di'apase. n. ſ. [διὰ πασῶν.] A chord including all tones. The old word for diapaſon. See Diapason.

And 'twixt them both a quadrant was the baſe,
Proportion'd equally by ſeven and nine;
Nine was the circle ſet in heaven's place,
All which compacted made a good diapaſe. Spenſer.

The ſweet numbers and melodious meaſures,
With which I wont the winged words to tie,
And make a tuneful diapaſe of pleaſures,
Now being let to run at liberty. Spenſer.

Diapa'son. n. ſ. [διὰ πασῶν.] Diapaſon denotes a chord which includes all tones; it is the ſame with that we call an eighth, or an octave; becauſe there are but ſeven tones or notes, and then the eighth is the ſame again with the firſt. Harris.

It diſcovereth the true coincidence of ſounds into diapaſons, which is the return of the ſame ſound. Bacon.

——— Harſh din
Broke the fair muſick that all creatures made
To their great Lord, whoſe love their motion ſway'd
In perfect diapaſon, whilſt they ſtood
In firſt obedience, and their ſtate of good. Milton.

Many a ſweet riſe, many as ſweet a fall,
A full-mouth diapaſon ſwallows all. Craſhaw.

From harmony, from heav'nly harmony,
This univerſal frame began:
From harmony to harmony
Through all the compaſs of the notes it ran,
The diapaſon cloſing full in man. Dryden.

DI'APER. n. ſ. [diapre, Fr. of uncertain etymology.] 1. Linen cloth woven in flowers, and other figures; the fineſt ſpecies of figured linen after damaſk. 2. A napkin; a towel.

(1.) Not any damſel, which her vaunteth moſt
In ſkilful knitting of ſoft ſilken twine;
Nor any weaver, which his work doth boaſt
In diaper, in damaſk, or in lyne,
Might in their diverſe cunning ever dare
With this ſo curious net-work to compare. Spenſer.

(2.) Let one attend him with a ſilver baſon
Full of roſe-water, and beſtrew'd with flowers;
Another bear the ewer, a third a diaper. Shakeſpeare.

To Di'aper. v. a. [from the noun.] 1. To variegate; to diverſify; to flower. 2. To draw flowers upon cloaths.

(1.) For fear the ſtones her tender foot ſhould wrong,
The ground he ſtrew'd with flowers all along,
And diaper'd like the diſcoloured mead. Spenſer.

Flora uſeth to cloath our grand-dame Earth with a new livery, diaper'd with various flowers, and chequered with delightful objects. Howel's Vocal Foreſt.

(2.) If you diaper upon folds, let your work be broken, and taken, as it were, by the half; for reaſon tells you, that your fold muſt cover ſomewhat unſeen. Peacham on Drawing.

DIAPHANE'ITY. n. ſ. [from διαφανεία.] Tranſparency; pellucidneſs; power of tranſmitting light.

Becauſe the outward coat of the eye ought to be pellucid, to tranſmit the light, which, if the eyes ſhould always ſtand open, would be apt to grow dry and ſhrink, and loſe their diaphaneity; therefore are the eye-lids ſo contrived as often to wink, that ſo they may, as it were, glaze and varniſh them over with the moiſture they contain. Ray.

DIAPHA'NICK. adj. [διὰ and φάνος.] Tranſparent; pellucid; having the power to tranſmit light.

Air is an element ſuperior, and lighter than water, through whoſe vaſt, open, ſubtile, diaphanick, or tranſparent body, the light, afterwards created, eaſily tranſpired. Raleigh.

DIA'PHANOUS. adj. [διὰ and φάνω.] Tranſparent; clear; tranſlucent; pellucid; capable to tranſmit light.

Ariſtotle calleth light a quality inherent, or clearing to a diaphanous body. Raleigh.

When he had taken off the inſect, he found in the leaf very little and diaphanous eggs, exactly like to thoſe which yet remained in the tubes of the fly's womb. Ray.

DIAPHORE'TICK. adj. [διαφορητικός.] Sudorifick; promoting a diaphoreſis or perſpiration; cauſing ſweat.

A diaphoretick medicine, or a ſudorifick, is ſomething that will provoke ſweating. Watts.

Diaphoreticks, or promoters of perſpiration, help the organs of digeſtion, becauſe the attenuation of the aliment makes it perſpirable. Arbuthnot.

DI'APHRAGM. n. ſ. [διάφραγμα.] 1. The midriff which divides the upper cavity of the body from the lower. 2. Any diviſion or partition which divides a hollow body.

(2.) It conſiſts of a faſciculus of bodies, round, about one ſixth of an inch in diameter, hollow, and parted into numerous cells by means of diaphragms, thick ſet throughout the whole length of the body. Woodward on Foſſils.

DIARRHOE'A. n. ſ. [διάῤῥοια.] A flux of the belly, whereby a perſon frequently goes to ſtool, and is cured either by purging off the cauſe, or reſtringing the bowels. Quincy.

During his diarrhœa I healed up the fontanels. Wiſeman.

DIARRHOE'TICK. adj. [from diarrhœa.] Promoting the flux of the belly; ſolutive; purgative.

Millet is diarrhœtick, cleanſing, and uſeful in diſeaſes of the kidneſs. Arbuthnot.

DI'ARY. n. ſ. [diarium, Lat.] An account of the tranſactions, accidents, and obſervations of every day; a journal.

In ſea-voyages, where there is nothing to be ſeen but ſky and ſea, men make diaries; but in land-travel, wherein ſo much is to be obſerved, they omit it. Bacon.

I go on in my intended diary. Tatler.

DIA'STOLE. n. ſ. [διαστολὴ.] 1. A figure in rhetorick, by which a ſhort ſyllable is made long. 2. The dilation of the heart.

(2.) The ſyſtole ſeems to reſemble the forcible bending of a ſpring, and the diaſtole its flying out again to its natural ſtate. Ray on the Creation.

DIA'STYLE. [διὰ and στύλος, a pillar.] A ſort of edifice where the pillars ſtand at ſuch a diſtance from one another, that three diameters of their thickneſs are allowed for intercolumniation. Harris.

DIATE'SSERON. n. ſ. [of διὰ and τέσσερα, four.] An interval in muſick, compoſed of one greater tone, one leſſer, and one greater ſemi-tone; its proportion being as four to three. It is called, in muſical compoſition, a perfect fourth. Harris.

DIATO'NICK. [of διατόνος.] The ordinary ſort of muſick which proceeds by different tones, either in aſcending or deſcending. It contains only the two greater and leſſer tones, and the greater ſemi-tone. Harris.

DIAZEU'TICK Tone. [of διὰ and ζύγνυμι.] In the ancient Greek muſick, disjoined two fourths, one on each ſide of it; and which being joined to either, made a fifth. This is, in our muſick, from A to B.

They allowed to this diazeutick tone, which is our La, Mi, the proportion of nine to eight, as being the unalterable difference of the fifth and fourth. Harris.

DI'BBLE. n. ſ. [from dipſel, Dutch, a ſharp point, Skinner; from dabble, Junius.] A ſmall ſpade; a pointed inſtrument with which the gardeners make holes for planting.

Through cunning, with dibble, rake, mattock, and ſpade,
By line and by level trim garden is made.
Tuſſer's Huſbandry.

DI'BSTONE. n. ſ. A little ſtone which children throw at another ſtone.

I have ſeen little girls exerciſe whole hours together, and take abundance of pains to be expert at dibſtones. Locke.

DICA'CITY. n. ſ. [dicacitas, Lat.] Pertneſs; ſaucineſs. Dict.

DICE. n. ſ. The plural of die. See DIE.

It is above a hundred to one againſt any particular throw, that you do not caſt any given ſet of faces with four cubical dice; becauſe there are ſo many ſeveral combinations of the ſix faces of four dice: now, after you have caſt all the trials but one, it is ſtill as much odds at the laſt remaining time, as it was at the firſt. Bentley.

To DICE. v. n. [from the noun.] To game with dice.

I was as virtuouſly given as a gentleman need to be; virtuous enough; ſwore little; diced not above ſeven times a-week. Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

DI'CE-BOX. n. ſ. [dice and box.] The box from which the dice are thrown.

What would you ſay, ſhould you ſee the ſparkler ſhaking her elbow for a whole night together, and thumping the table with a dice-box? Addiſon's Guardian.

DI'CER. n. ſ. [from dice.] A player at dice; a gameſter.

——— They make marriage vows
As falſe as dicers' oaths. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

DICH. adj. This word ſeems corrupted from dit for do it.

——— Rich men ſin, and I eat root:
Much good dich thy good heart, Apemantus.
Shakeſpeare's Timon.

DICHO'TOMY. n. ſ. [διχοτομία.] Diſtribution of ideas by pairs.

Some perſons have diſturbed the order of nature, and abuſed their readers by an affectation of dichotomies, trichotomies, ſevens, twelves, &c. Let the nature of the ſubject, conſidered together with the deſign which you have in view, always determine the number of parts into which you divide it. Watts.

DI'CKENS. A kind of adverbial exclamation, importing, as it ſeems, much the ſame with the devil; but I know not whence derived.

Where had you this pretty weathercock?
— I cannot tell what the dickens his name is my huſband had him of. Shakeſpeare's Merry Wives of Windſor.

What a dickens does he mean by a trivial ſum?
But han't you found it, ſir? Congreve's Old Batchelor.

DI'CKER of Leather. n. ſ. [dicra, low Latin.] Ten hides. Dict.

To DI'CTATE. v. a. [dicto, Lat.] To deliver to another with authority; to declare with confidence.

The ſpoils of elephants the roofs inlay,
And ſtudded amber darts a golden ray;
Such, and not nobler, in the realms above,
My wonder dictates is the dome of Jove. Pope's Odyſſey.

Whatſoever is dictated to us by God himſelf, or by men who are divinely inſpired, muſt be believed with full aſſurance. Watts.

DI'CTATE. n. ſ. [dictatum, Lat.] Rule or maxim delivered with authority; preſcription; preſcript.

Thoſe right helps of art which will ſcarce be found by thoſe who ſervilely confine themſelves to the dictates of others. Locke.

I credit what the Grecian dictates ſay,
And Samian ſounds o'er Scota's hills convey. Prior.
Then let this dictate of my love prevail. Pope's Odyſſey.

Dicta'tion. n. ſ. [from dictate.] The act or practice of dictating or preſcribing. Dict.

Di'ctionary. n. ſ. [dictionarium, Lat.] A book containing the words of any language in alphabetical order; with explanations of their meaning; a lexicon; a vocabulary, a word-book.

Some have delivered the polity of ſpirits, and left an account that they ſtand in awe of charms, ſpells, and conjurations; that they are afraid of letters and characters, notes and daſhes, which, ſet together, do ſignify nothing; and not only in the dictionary of man, but in the ſubtler vocabulary of Satan. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Is it ſuch a horrible fault to tranſlate ſimulacra images? I ſee what a good thing it is to have a good catholick dictionary. Stillingfleet.

An army, or a parliament, is a collection of men; a dictionary, or nomenclature, is a collection of words. Watts.

Did. of do. [ꝺiꝺ, Saxon.] 1. The preterite of do. 2. The ſign of the preter-imperfect tenſe, or perfect. 3. It is ſometimes uſed emphatically: as, I did really love him.

(1.) Thou can'ſt not ſay I did it. Shakeſpeare.
What did that greatneſs in a woman's mind?
Ill lodg'd and weak to act what it deſign'd. Dryden.
(2.) When did his pen on learning fix a brand,
Or rail at arts he did not underſtand? Dryden.

Dida'ctical } adj. [διδακτικὸς.] Preceptive; giving pre-
Dida'ctick. } cepts: as, a didactick poem is a poem that gives rules for ſome art; as the Georgicks.

The means uſed to this purpoſe are partly didactical, and partly protreptical, demonſtrating the truth of the goſpel; and then urging the profeſſors of thoſe truths to be ſtedfaſt in the faith, and to beware of infidelity. Ward on Infidelity.

Di'dapper. n. ſ. [from dip.] A bird that dives into the water.

Didasca'lick. adj. [διδασκαλικὸς.] Preceptive; didactick; giving precepts in ſome art.

I found it neceſſary to form ſome ſtory, and give a kind of body to the poem: under what ſpecies it may be comprehended, whether didaſcalick or heroick, I leave to the judgment of the criticks. Prior.

To Di'dder. v. a. [diddern, Teut. zittern, Germ.] To quake with cold; to ſhiver. A provincial word. Skinner.

Didst. The ſecond perſon of the preter tenſe of do. See Did.

Oh laſt and beſt of Scots! who didſt maintain
Thy country's freedom from a foreign reign. Dryden.

Didu'ction. n. ſ. [diductio, Latin.] Separation by withdrawing one part from the other.

He ought to ſhew what kind of ſtrings they are, which, though ſtrongly faſtened to the inſide of the receiver and ſuperficies of the bladder, muſt draw as forcibly one as another, in compariſon of thoſe that within the bladder draw ſo as to hinder the diduction of its ſides. Boyle.

To DIE. v. a. [ꝺeaᵹ, Saxon, a colour.] To tinge; to colour; to ſtain.

——— So much of death her thoughts
Had entertain'd, as dy'd her cheeks with pale. Milton.
All white, a virgin ſaint ſhe ſought the ſkies;
For marriage, though it ſullies not, it dies. Dryden.

Die. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Colour; tincture; ſtain; hue acquired.

——— It will help me nothing
To plead mine innocence; for that die is on me,
Which makes my whit'ſt part black.
Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

We have dainty works of feathers of wonderful luſtre, excellent dies, and many. Bacon's New Atlantis.

Darkneſs we ſee emerges into light,
And ſhining ſuns deſcend to ſable night:
Ev'n heav'n itſelf receives another die,
When weary'd animals in ſlumbers lie
Of midnight eaſe; another, when the gray
Of morn preludes the ſplendor of the day. Dryden.

It is ſurpriſing to ſee the images of the mind ſtamped upon the aſpect; to ſee the cheeks take the die of the paſſions, and appear in all the colours of thought. Collier of the Aſpect.

To Die. v. n. [ꝺeaꝺian, Saxon.] 1. To loſe life; to expire; to paſs into another ſtate of exiſtence. 2. To periſh by violence or diſeaſe. 3. It has by before an inſtrument of death. 4. Of before a diſeaſe. 5. For commonly before a privative, and of before a poſitive cauſe: theſe prepoſitions are not always truely diſtinguiſhed. 6. To be puniſhed with death. 7. To be loſt; to periſh; to come to nothing. 8. To ſink; to faint. 9. [In theology.] To periſh everlaſtingly. 10. To languiſh with pleaſure or tenderneſs. 11. To vaniſh. 12. [In the ſtyle of lovers.] To languiſh with affection. 13. To wither, as a vegetable. 14. To grow vapid, as liquor.

(1.) Thou doſt kill me with thy falſhood; and it grieves me not to die, but it grieves me that thou art the murtherer. Sidney.

Nor did the third his conqueſts long ſurvive,
Dying ere ſcarce he had begun to live. Addiſon's Ovid.
Oh let me live my own, and die ſo too!
To live and die is all I have to do! Denham.

(2.) The dira only ſerved to confirm him in his firſt opinion, that it was his deſtiny to die in the enſuing combat. Dryden.

Talk not of life or ranſom, he replies,
Patroclus dead, whoever meets me, dies:
In vain a ſingle Trojan ſues for grace;
But leaſt the ſons of Priam's hateful race:
Die then, my friend! what boots it to deplore!
The great, the good Patroclus is no more!
He, far thy better, was foredoom'd to die;

To concoct in the ſtomach, ſo as that the various particles of food may be applied to their proper uſe. 3. To ſoften by heat, as in a boiler, or in a dunghill: a chemical term. 4. To range methodically in the mind; to apply knowledge by meditation to its proper uſe. 5. To reduce to any plan, ſcheme, or method. 6. To receive without loathing or repugnance; not to reject. 7. To receive and enjoy. 8. [In chirurgery.] To diſpoſe a wound; to generate pus in order to a cure.

(2.) If little faults, proceeding on diſtemper,
Shall not be wink'd at, how ſhall we ſtretch our eye,
When capital crimes, chew'd, ſwallow'd, and digeſted,
Appear? Shakeſpeare's Henry V.

Each then has organs to digeſt his food;
One to beget, and one receive the brood. Prior.

(4.) Choſen friends, with ſenſe refin'd,
Learning digeſted well. Thomſon.

(5.) ——————— Our play
Leaps o'er the vaunt and firſtlings of thoſe broils,
'Ginning i' th' middle: ſtarting thence away,
To what may be digeſted in a play. Shakeſpeare.

(6.) ——— Firſt, let us go to dinner.
—Nay, let me praiſe you while I have a ſtomach.
—No, pray thee, let it ſerve for table-talk;
Then howſoe'er thou ſpeak'ſt, 'mong other things
I ſhall digeſt it. Shakeſpeare's Merchant of Venice.

The pleaſance of numbers is, that rudeneſs and barbariſm might the better taſte and digeſt the leſſons of civility.
Peacham.

(7.) ———— Cornwal and Albany,
With my two daughters dowers, digeſt the third. Shakeſp.

To Dige'st. v. n. To generate matter as a wound, and tend to a cure.

Dige'ster. n. ſ. [from digeſt.] 1. He that digeſts or diſpoſes. 2. He that digeſts or concocts his food. 3. A ſtrong veſſel or engine, contrived by M. Papin, wherein to boil, with a very ſtrong heat, any bony ſubſtances, ſo as to reduce them into a fluid ſtate. Quincy. 4. That which cauſes or ſtrengthens the concoctive power.

(2.) People that are bilious and fat, rather than lean, are great eaters and ill digeſters. Arbuthnot.

(4.) Rice is of excellent uſe for all illneſſes of the ſtomach, a great reſtorer of health, and a great digeſter. Temple.

Dige'stible. adj. [from digeſt.] That which is capable of being digeſted or concocted in the ſtomach.

Thoſe medicines that purge by ſtool are, at the firſt, not digeſtible by the ſtomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

Dige'stion. n. ſ. [from digeſt.] 1. The act of digeſting or concocting food in the ſtomach. 2. The preparation of matter by a chemical heat. 3. Reduction to a plan; the act of methodiſing; the maturation of a deſign. 4. The act of diſpoſing a wound to generate matter. 5. The diſpoſition of a wound or ſore to generate matter.

(1.) Now good digeſtion wait on appetite,
And health on both. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

Digeſtion is a fermentation begun, becauſe there are all the requiſites of ſuch a fermentation; heat, air, and motion: but it is not a complete fermentation, becauſe that requires a greater time than the continuance of the aliment in the ſtomach: vegetable putrefaction reſembles very much animal digeſtion. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Quantity of food cannot be determined by meaſures and weights, or any general Leſſian rules; but muſt vary with the vigour or decays of age or of health, and the uſe or diſuſe of air or of exerciſe, with the changes of appetite; and then, by what every man may find or ſuſpect of the preſent ſtrength or weakneſs of digeſtion. Temple.

Every morſel to a ſatisfied hunger, is only a new labour to a tired digeſtion. South.

(2.) We conceive, indeed, that a perfect good concoction, or digeſtion, or maturation of ſome metals, will produce gold. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

Did chymick chance the furnaces prepare,
Raiſe all the labour-houſes of the air,
And lay crude vapours in digeſtion there. Blackmore.

(3.) The digeſtion of the counſels in Sweden is made in ſenate, conſiſting of forty counſellors, who are generally the greateſt men. Temple.

(1.) A chilifactory menſtruum, or a digeſtive preparation, drawn from ſpecies or individuals, whoſe ſtomachs peculiarly diſſolve lapideous bodies. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

(2.) The earth and ſun were in that very ſtate; the one active, piercing, and digeſtive by its heat; the other paſſive, receptive, and ſtored with materials for ſuch a production. Hale.

(3.) To buſineſs, ripen'd by digeſtive thought,
This future rule is into method brought. Dryden.

Dige'stive. n. ſ. [from digeſt.] An application which diſpoſes a wound to generate matter.

I dreſſed it with digeſtives. Wiſeman on Abſceſſes.

Dige'sture. n. ſ. Concoction: not uſed.

Neither tie yourſelf always to eat meats of eaſy digeſture; ſuch as veal, ſweetbreads. Harvey.

Di'gger. n. ſ. [from dig] One that opens the ground with a ſpade.

When we viſited mines, we have been told by diggers, that even when the ſky ſeemed clear, there would ſuddenly ariſe a ſteam ſo thick, that it would put out their candles. Boyle.

To Dight. v. a. [ꝺihꞇan, to prepare, to regulate, Saxon.] 1. To dreſs; to deck; to bedeck; to embelliſh; to adorn. It ſeems always to ſignify the paſt; the participle paſſive is dight, as dighted in Hudibras is perhaps improper. 2. To put on.

(1.) ——Let my due feet never fail
To walk the ſtudious cloiſters pale,
And love the high embowed roof,
With antick pillar, maſſy proof,
And ſtoried windows richly dight,
Caſting a dim religious light. Milton.

Juſt ſo the proud inſulting laſs
Array'd and dighted Hudibras. Hudibras.

(2.) On his head his dreadful hat he dight,
Which maketh him inviſible to fight. Hubberd's Tale.

Di'git. n. ſ. [digitus, Latin.] 1. The meaſure of length containing three fourths of an inch. 2. The twelfth part of the diameter of the ſun or moon. 3. Any of the numbers expreſſed by ſingle figures; any number to ten: ſo called from counting upon the fingers.

(1.) If the inverted tube of mercury be but twenty-five digits high, or ſomewhat more, the quickſilver will not fall, but remain ſuſpended in the tube, becauſe it cannot preſs the ſubjacent mercury with ſo great a force as doth the incumbent cylinder of the air, reaching thence to the top of the atmoſphere. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

(2.) Not only the number ſeven and nine, from conſiderations abſtruſe, have been extolled by moſt, but all or moſt of other digits have been as myſtically applauded. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Di'gitated. adj. [from digitus, Latin.] Branched out into diviſions like fingers; as a digitated leaf is a leaf compoſed of many ſmall leaves.

For animals multifidous, or ſuch as are digitated, or have ſeveral diviſions in their feet, there are but two that are uniparous; that is, men and elephants. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Digladia'tion. n. ſ. [digladiatio, Latin.] A combat with ſwords; any quarrel or conteſt.

Ariſtotle ſeems purpoſely to intend the cheriſhing of controverſial digladiations, by his own affection of an intricate obſcurity. Glanville's Scepſis.

Di'gnified. adj. [from dignify.] Inveſted with ſome dignity: it is uſed chiefly of the clergy.

Abbots are ſtiled dignified clerks, as having ſome dignity in the church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Dignifica'tion. n. ſ. [from dignify.] Exaltation.

I grant that where a noble and ancient deſcent and merit meet in any man, it is a double dignification of that perſon. Walton's Angler.

To DI'GNIFY. v. a. [from dignus and facio, Latin.] 1. To advance; to prefer; to exalt. Uſed chiefly of the clergy. 2. To honour; to adorn; to give luſtre to.

(2). ——Such a day,
So fought, ſo follow'd, and ſo fairly won,
Came not till now to dignify the times,
Since Cæſar's fortunes! Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

Not that we think us worthy ſuch a gueſt,
But your worth will dignify our feaſt. Ben. Johnſon.

——No turbots dignify my boards;
But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords. Pope.

Di'gnitary. n. ſ. [from dignus, Latin.] A clergyman advanced to ſome dignity, to ſome rank above that of a parochial prieſt.

If there be any dignitaries, whoſe preferments are perhaps not liable to the accuſation of ſuperfluity, they may be perſons of ſuperior merit. Swift.

Di'gnity. n. ſ. [dignitas, Latin.] 1. Rank of elevation. 2. Grandeur of mien; elevation of aſpect. 3. Advancement; preferment; high place. 4. [Among eccleſiaſticks.] By a dignity we underſtand that promotion or preferment to which any juriſdiction is annexed. Ayliffe's Parergon. 5. Maxims; general principles; κυριαί δοξαί. 6. [In aſtrology.] The planet is in dignity when it is in any ſign.

(1.) Angels are not any where ſpoken ſo highly of as our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, and are not in dignity equal to him. Hooker.

(2.) Some men have a native dignity, which will procure them more regard by a look, than others can obtain by the moſt imperious commands. Clariſſa.

(3.) Faſter than ſpring-time ſhow'rs comes thought on thought,
And not a thought but thinks on dignity. Shakeſpeare.

——For thoſe of old,
And theſe late dignities heap'd up to them. Shakeſpeare.

(5.) The ſciences concluding from dignities, and principles known by themſelves, receive not ſatisfaction from probable reaſons, much leſs from bare aſſeverations. Brown.

Digno'tion. n. ſ. [from dignoſco, Latin.] Diſtinction; diſtinguiſhing mark.

That temperamental dignotions, and conjecture of prevalent humours, may be collected from ſpots in our nails, we are not averſe to concede. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To DIGRE'SS. v. n. [digreſſus, Latin.] 1. To turn aſide out of the road. 2. To depart from the main deſign of a diſcourſe, or chief tenour of an argument. 3. To wander; to expatiate. 4. To go out of the right way, or common track; to tranſgreſs; to deviate: not in uſe.

(2.) In the purſuit of an argument there is hardly room to digreſs into a particular definition, as often as a man varies the ſignification of any term. Locke.

(3.) It ſeemeth, to digreſs no farther, that the Tartarians, ſpreading ſo far, cannot be the Iſraelites. Brerewood.

(4.) ——— I am come to keep my word,
Though in ſome part am forced to digreſs,
Which at more leiſure I will ſo excuſe
As you ſhall well be ſatisfied. Shakeſpeare.

Thy noble ſhape is but a form of wax,
Digreſſing from the valour of a man. Shakeſpeare.

Digre'ssion. n. ſ. [digreſſio, Latin.] 1. A paſſage deviating from the main tenour or deſign of a diſcourſe. 2. Deviation.

(1.) The good man thought ſo much of his late conceived commonwealth, that all other matters were but digreſſions to him. Sidney.

——— He, ſhe knew, would intermix
Grateful digreſſions, and ſolve high diſpute
With conjugal careſſes. Milton.

Here ſome digreſſion I muſt make, t' accuſe
Thee, my forgetful and ungrateful muſe. Denham.

To content and fill the eye of the underſtanding, the beſt authors ſprinkle their works with pleaſing digreſſions, with which they recreate the minds of their readers. Dryden.

(2.) The digreſſion of the ſun is not equal; but near the equinoctial interſections, it is right and greater; near the ſolſtices, more oblique and leſſer. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

DIJUDICA'TION. n. ſ. [dijudicatio, Latin.] Judicial diſtinction.

DIKE. n. ſ. [ꝺic, Saxon; dyk, Erſe.] 1. A channel to receive water. 2. A mound to hinder inundations.

(1.) The dykes are fill'd, and with a roaring ſound
The riſing rivers float the nether ground. Dryden's Virgil.

The king of dykes! than whom no ſluice of mud
With deeper ſable blots the ſilver flood. Pope's Dunciad.

(2.) God, that breaks up the flood-gates of ſo great a deluge, and all the art and induſtry of man is not ſufficient to raiſe up dykes and ramparts againſt it. Cowley.

To DILA'CERATE. v. a. [dilacero, Latin.] To tear; to rend; to force in two.

The infant, at the accompliſhed period, ſtruggling to come forth, dilacerates and breaks thoſe parts which reſtrained him before. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

DILACERA'TION. n. ſ. [from dilaceratio, Latin.] The act of rending in two.

The greateſt ſenſation of pain is by the obſtruction of the ſmall veſſels, and dilaceration of the nervous fibres. Arbuthnot.

To DILA'NIATE. v. a. [dilanio, Latin.] To tear; to rend in pieces.

Rather than they would dilaniate the entrails of their own mother, and expoſe her thereby to be raviſhed, they met half way in a gallant kind. Howel's Engl. Tears.

To DILA'PIDATE. v. n. [dilapido, Latin.] To go to ruin; to fall by decay.

DILAPIDA'TION. n. ſ. [dilapidatio, Latin.] The incumbent's ſuffering the chancel, or any other edifices of his eccleſiaſtical living, to go to ruin or decay, by neglecting to repair the ſame: and it likewiſe extends to his committing, or ſuffering to be committed, any wilful waſte in or upon the glebe-woods, or any other inheritance of the church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

'Tis the duty of all church-wardens to prevent the dilapidations of the chancel and manſion-houſe belonging to the rector or vicar. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DILATABI'LITY. n. ſ. [from dilatable.] The quality of admitting extenſion.

We take notice of the wonderful dilatability or extenſiveneſs of the gullets of ſerpents: I have taken two adult mice out of the ſtomach of an adder, whoſe neck was not bigger than my little finger.

By this continual contractability and dilatability, by different degrees of heat, the air is kept in a conſtant motion. Arbuth.

DILA'TABLE. adj. [from dilate.] Capable of extenſion.

The windpipe divides itſelf into a great number of branches called bronchia: theſe end in ſmall air-bladders, dilatable and contractable, capable to be inflated by the admiſſion of air, and to ſubſide at the expulſion of it. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DILATA'TION. n. ſ. [from dilatatio, Lat.] 1. The act of extending into greater ſpace: oppoſed to contraction. 2. The ſtate of being extended; the ſtate in which the parts are at more diſtance from each other.

(1.) The motions of the tongue, by contraction and dilatation, are ſo eaſy and ſo ſubtle, that you can hardly conceive or diſtinguiſh them aright. Holder.

(2.) Joy cauſeth a cheerfulneſs and vigour in the eyes; ſinging, leaping, dancing, and ſometimes tears: all theſe are the effects of the dilatation, and coming forth of the ſpirits into the outward parts. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

The image of the ſun ſhould be drawn out into an oblong form, either by a dilatation of every ray, or by any other caſual inequality of the refractions. Newton.

To DILA'TE. v. a. [dilato, Lat.] 1. To extend; to ſpread out; to enlarge: oppoſed to contract. 2. To relate at large; to tell diffuſely and copiouſly.

(1.) But ye thereby much greater glory gate,
Than had ye ſorted with a prince's peer;
For now your light doth more itſelf dilate,
And in my darkneſs greater doth appear. Spenſer.

———Satan alarm'd,
Collecting all his might, dilated ſtood,
Like Teneriff, or Atlas, unremov'd. Milton.

———Opener of mine eyes,
Dim erſt; dilated ſpirits, ampler heart,
And growing up to godhead: which for thee
Chiefly I ſought; without thee, can deſpiſe. Milton.

Through all the air his ſounding ſtrings dilate
Sorrow, like that which touch'd our hearts of late. Waller.

Diffus'd, it riſes in a higher ſphere;
Dilates its drops, and ſoftens into air. Prior.

I mark the various fury of the winds;
Theſe neither ſeaſons guide, nor order binds:
They now dilate, and now contract their force;
Various their ſpeed, but endleſs is their courſe. Prior.

The ſecond refraction would ſpread the rays one way as much as the firſt doth another, and ſo dilate the image in breadth as much as the firſt doth in length. Newton.

(2.) But he would not endure that woful theam
For to dilate at large; but urged ſore,
With piercing words, and pitiful implore,
Him haſty to ariſe. Fairy Queen.

———I obſerving,
Took once a pliant hour, and found good means
To draw from her a prayer of earneſt heart,
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by parcels ſhe had ſomething heard,
But not diſtinctively. Shakeſpeare's Othello.

To DILA'TE. v. n. 1. To widen; to grow wide. 2. To ſpeak largely and copiouſly.

(1.) His heart dilates and glories in his ſtrength. Addiſon.

(2.) It may be behoveful for princes, in matters of grace, to tranſact the ſame publickly, and by themſelves; or their miniſters to dilate upon it, and improve their luſtre, by any addition or eloquence of ſpeech. Clarendon.

DILA'TOR. n. ſ. [from dilate.] That which widens or extends.

The buccinatores, or blowers up of the cheeks, and the dilators of the noſe, are too ſtrong in cholerick people. Arbuthnot.

DI'LATORINESS. n. ſ. [from dilatory.] The quality of being dilatory; ſlowneſs; ſluggiſhneſs.

DI'LATORY. adj. [dilatoire, Fr. dilatorius, Lat.] Tardy; ſlow; given to procraſtination; addicted to delay; ſluggiſh; loitering.

An inferior council, after former tedious ſuits in a higher court, would be but dilatory, and ſo to little purpoſe. Hayward.

What wound did ever heal but by degrees?
Thou know'ſt we work by wit, and not by witchcraft;
And wit depends on dilatory time. Shakeſpeare's Othello.

Theſe cardinals trifle with me: I abhor
This dilatory ſloth, and tricks of Rome. Shak. Henry VIII.

——Dilatory fortune plays the jilt
With the brave, noble, honeſt, gallant man,
To throw herſelf away on fools and knaves. Otway.

A dilatory temper commits innumerable cruelties without deſign. Addiſon, Spectator.

DILE'CTION. n. ſ. [dilectio, Lat.] The act of loving; kindneſs.

So free is Chriſt's dilection, that the grand condition of our felicity is our belief. Boyle's Seraphick Love.

DILE'MMA. n. ſ. [δίλημμα.] 1. An argument equally concluſive by contrary ſuppoſitions. A young rhetorician applied to an old ſophiſt to be taught the art of pleading, and bargained for a certain reward to be paid, when he ſhould gain a cauſe. The maſter ſued for his reward, and the ſcholar endeavoured to elude his claim by a dilemma: If I gain my cauſe, I ſhall withhold your pay, becauſe the judge's award will be againſt you; if I loſe it, I may withhold it, becauſe I ſhall not yet have gained a cauſe. On the contrary, ſays the maſter, if you gain your cauſe, you muſt pay me, becauſe you are to pay me when you gain a cauſe; if you loſe it, you muſt pay me, becauſe the judges will award it. 2. A difficult or doubtful choice; a vexatious alternative.

(1.) A dilemma, that Morton uſed, to raiſe benevolence, ſome called his fork, and ſome his crotch. Bacon's Henry VII.

Hope, whoſe weak being ruin'd is
Alike if it ſucceed, and if it miſs;
Whom good or ill does equally confound,
And both the horns of fate's dilemma wound. Cowley.

(2.) A ſtrong dilemma in a deſp'rate caſe!
To act with infamy, or quit the place. Swift.

A dire dilemma; either way I'm ſped;
If foes, they write, if friends, they read me dead. Pope.

DI'LIGENCE. n. ſ. [diligentia, Lat.] Induſtry; aſſiduity; conſtancy in buſineſs; continuance of endeavour; unintermitted application; the contrary to idleneſs.

Do thy diligence to come ſhortly unto me. 2 Tim. iv. 9.

Brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election ſure. 2 Pet. i. 10.

DI'LIGENT. adj. [diligens, Lat.] 1. Conſtant in application; perſevering in endeavour; aſſiduous; not idle; not negligent; not lazy. 2. Conſtantly applied; proſecuted with activity and perſeverance; aſſiduous.

(1.) Seeſt thou a man diligent in his buſineſs? he ſhall ſtand before kings. Prov. xxii. 29.

(2.) And the judges ſhall make diligent inquiſition. Deut. xix.

DI'LIGENTLY. adv. [from diligent.] With aſſiduity; with heed and perſeverance; not careleſsly; not idly; not negligently.

If you inquire not attentively and diligently, you ſhall never be able to diſcern a number of mechanical motions. Bacon.

The ancients have diligently examined in what conſiſts the beauty of good poſtures. Dryden's Du Freſnoy.

DILL. n. ſ. [ꝺile, Saxon.] It hath a ſlender, fibroſe, annual root; the leaves are like thoſe of fennel; the ſeeds are oval, plain, ſtreaked, and bordered.

(2.) The chamber was dark, leſt theſe colours ſhould be diluted and weakened by the mixture of any adventitious light. Newton.

DILU'TE. adj. Thin; attenuated.

If the red and blue colours were more dilute and weak, the diſtance of the images would be leſs than an inch; and if they were more intenſe and full, that diſtance would be greater. Newton.

DILU'TER. n. ſ. [from dilute.] That which makes any thing elſe thin.

Water is the only diluter, and the beſt diſſolvent of moſt of the ingredients of our aliment. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DILU'TION. n. ſ. [dilutio, Lat.] The act of making any thing thin or weak.

Oppoſite to dilution is coagulation, or thickening, which is performed by diſſipating the moſt liquid parts by heat, or by inſinuating ſome ſubſtances, which make the parts of the fluid cohere more ſtrongly. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DILU'VIAN. adj. [from diluvium, Lat.] Relating to the deluge.

Suppoſe that this diluvian lake ſhould riſe to the mountain tops in one place, and not diffuſe itſelf equally into all countries about. Burnet's Theory.

DIM. adj. [ꝺimme, Saxon; dy, Welſh; dow, Erſe.] 1. Not having a quick ſight; not ſeeing clearly. 2. Dull of apprehenſion. 3. Not clearly ſeen; obſcure; imperfectly diſcovered. 4. Obſtructing the act of viſion; not luminous; ſomewhat dark.

(1. For her true form, how can my ſpark diſcern,
Which, dim by nature, art did never clear? Davies.

(2.) The underſtanding is dim, and cannot by its natural light diſcover ſpiritual truths. Rogers.

(3.) We might be able to aim at ſome dim and ſeeming conception, how matter might begin to exiſt by the power of that eternal firſt Being. Locke.

Something, as dim to our internal view,
Is thus perhaps the cauſe of all we do. Pope.

(4.) Her face right wond'rous fair did ſeem to be,
That her broad beauty's beam great brightneſs threw
Through the dim ſhade, that all men might it ſee. Spenſer.

To DIM. v. a. [from the adjective.] 1. To cloud; to darken; to hinder from a full perception of light, and free exerciſe of viſion. 2. To make leſs bright; to obſcure.

(1.) As where the Almighty's lightning brand does light,
It dims the dazed eyen, and daunts the ſenſes quite.
Spenſer's Fairy Queen.

It hath been obſerved by the ancients, that much uſe of Venus doth dim the ſight; and yet eunuchs, which are unable to generate, are nevertheleſs alſo dim ſighted. Bacon.

Every one declares againſt blindneſs, and yet who almoſt is not fond of that which dims his ſight? Locke.

For thee I dim theſe eyes, and ſtuff this head,
With all ſuch reading as was never read. Pope's Dunciad.

(2.) A ſhip that through the ocean wide,
By conduct of ſome ſtar doth make her way,
When as a ſtorm hath dimm'd her truſty guide,
Out of her courſe doth wander far aſtray. Spenſer.

——— All of us have cauſe
To wail the dimming of our ſhining ſtar. Shakeſp. R. III.

Thus while he ſpake, each paſſion dimm'd his face,
Thrice chang'd. Milton.

The principal figure in a picture is like a king among his courtiers, who dims all his attendants. Dryden.

DIME'NSION. n. ſ. [dimenſio, Lat.] Space contained in any thing; bulk; extent; capacity. It is ſeldom uſed but in the plural. The three dimenſions are length, breadth, and depth.

(2.) Take but degree away, untune that ſtring,
And hark what diſcord follows; each thing meets
In meer oppugnancy. Shakeſp. Troil. and Creſſ.
Diſcord, like that of muſick's various parts,
Diſcord that makes the harmony of hearts;
Diſcord that only this diſpute ſhall bring,
Who beſt ſhall love the duke and ſerve the king. Dryden.
All nature is but art unknown to thee;
All chance, direction which thou canſt not ſee;
All diſcord, harmony not underſtood;
All partial evil, univerſal good. Pope.

(3.) It is ſound alone that doth immediately and incorporeally affect moſt; this is moſt manifeſt in muſick, and concords and diſcords in muſick: for all ſounds, whether they be ſharp or flat, if they be ſweet, have a roundneſs and equality; and if they be harſh, are unequal: for a diſcord itſelf is but a harſhneſs of divers ſounds meeting. Bacon.

It is the lark that ſings ſo out of tune,
Straining harſh diſcords and unpleaſing ſharps. Shakeſpeare.

How doth muſick amaze us, when of diſcords ſhe maketh the ſweeteſt harmony? Peacham.

To Di'scord. v. n. [diſcordo, Latin.] To diſagree; not to ſuit with.

Sounds do diſturb and alter the one the other; ſometimes the one drowning the other, and making it not heard; ſometimes the one jarring and diſcording with the other, and making a confuſion. Bacon.

Disco'rdance. } n. ſ. [from diſcord.] Diſagreement; oppoſition; inconſiſtency.

The unborn nephews for the father's fault? Davies.

Unmuffle, ye faint ſtars, and thou fair moon,
Stoop thy pale viſage through an amber cloud,
And diſinherit chaos that reigns here
In double night of darkneſs, and of ſlander. Milton.

Poſterity ſtands curs'd! fair patrimony,
That I muſt leave ye, ſons! O were I able
To waſte it all myſelf, and leave ye none;
So diſinherited, how would ye bleſs
Me, now you curſe! Milton.

Of how fair a portion Adam diſinherited his whole poſterity by one ſingle prevarication! South.

To DISINTE'R. v. a. [from dis and inter.] To unbury; to take as out of the grave.

The philoſopher, the ſaint, or the hero, the wiſe, the good, or the great man, very often lie hid and concealed in a plebeian, which a proper education might have diſinterred. Addiſon.

DISI'NTERESSED. adj. [dis and intereſſe, French. It is written diſintereſted by thoſe who derive it immediately from intereſt, and I think more properly.] Without regard to private advantage; not biaſſed by particular views; impartial.

Not that tradition's parts are uſeleſs here,
When general, old, diſintereſs'd, and clear. Dryden.

DISI'NTERESSMENT. n. ſ. [dis and intereſſement, French.] Diſregard to private advantage; diſintereſt; diſintereſtedneſs. This word like charges in the ſame ſentence, is merely gallick.

He has managed ſome of the charges of the kingdom with known ability, and laid them down with entire diſintereſſment. Prior's Poſtſcript.

DISI'NTEREST. n. ſ. [dis and intereſt.] 1. What is contrary to one's wiſh or proſperity; that which any one is concerned to prevent. 2. Indifference to profit; ſuperiority to regards of private advantage.

DISJU'NCTION. n. ſ. [from disjunctio, Lat.] Diſunion; ſeparation; parting.

———— You may
Enjoy your miſtreſs now, from whom, you ſee,
There's no disjunction to be made, but by
Your ruin. Shakeſpeare's Winter's Tale.

There is a great analogy between the body natural and politick, in which the eccleſiaſtical, or ſpiritual part, juſtly ſupplies the part of the ſoul; and the violent ſeparation of this from the other, does as certainly infer death and diſſolution, as the disjunction of the body and the ſoul in the natural. South.

DISJU'NCTIVE. adj. [disjunctivus, Lat.] 1. Incapable of union. 2. That which marks ſeparation or oppoſition; as, I love him, or fear him. 3. [In logick.] A disjunctive propoſition is when the parts are oppoſed to one another by disjunctive particles; as, It is either day or night: The weather is either ſhiny or rainy: Quantity is either length, breadth, or depth. The truth of disjunctives depends on the neceſſary and immediate oppoſition of the parts, therefore only the laſt of theſe examples is true; but the two firſt are not ſtrictly true, becauſe twilight is a medium between day and night; and dry cloudy weather is a medium between ſhining and raining. Watts's Logick.

(1.) Such principles, whoſe atoms are of that disjunctive nature, as not to be united in a ſufficient number to make a viſible maſs. Grew.

(2.) There are ſuch words as disjunctive conjunctions. Watts.

(3.) A disjunctive ſyllogyſm is when the major propoſition is disjunctive; as, The earth moves in a circle, or an ellipſis; but it does not move in a circle, therefore it moves in an ellipſis. Watts's Logick.

DISJU'NCTIVELY. adv. [from disjunctive.] Diſtinctly; ſeparately.

What he obſerves of the numbers disjunctively and apart, reaſon ſuggeſts to be applicable to the whole body united. Cauſes of the Decay of Piety.

(1.) He then them took, and tempering goodly well
Their contrary diſlikss with loved means,
Did place them all in order, and compel
To keep themſelves within their ſundry reigns,
Together link'd with adamantine chains. Spenſer.

Your diſlikes to whom I would be pleaſing,
Do cloud my joys with danger and with ſorrow. Shakeſp.

God's grace, that principle of his new birth, gives him continual diſlike to ſin. Hammond's Pract. Catechiſm.

Our likings or diſlikes are founded rather upon humour and fancy than upon reaſon. L'Eſtrange.

Sorrow would have been as ſilent as thoughts, as ſevere as philoſophy. It would have reſted in inward ſenſes, tacit diſlikes. South.

The jealous man is not angry if you diſlike another; but if you find thoſe faults which are in his own character, you diſcover not only your diſlike of another, but of himſelf. Addiſon.

(2.) This ſad Aletes, and a murmur roſe
That ſhew'd diſlike among the Chriſtian peers. Fairfax.

To DISLI'KE. v. a. [dis and like.] To diſapprove; to regard without affection; to regard with ill-will or diſguſt.

What moſt he ſhould diſlike, ſeems pleaſant to him;
What like, offenſive. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

———— Ye diſlike, and ſo undo
The players, and diſgrace the poet too. Denham.

Whoſoever diſlikes the digreſſions, or grows weary of them, may throw them away. Temple.

DISLI'KEFUL. adj. [diſlike and full.] Diſaffected; malign: not in uſe.

I think it beſt, by an union of manners, and conformity of minds, to bring them to be one people, and to put away the diſlikeful conceit of the one and the other. Spenſer's Ireland.

To DISLI'KEN. v. a. [dis and like.] To make unlike. Unuſual.

———— Muffle your face,
Diſmantle you; and, as you can, diſliken
The truth of your own ſeeming. Shakeſp. Winter's Tale.

DISLI'KENESS. n. ſ. [dis and likeneſs.] Diſſimilitude; not reſemblance; unlikeneſs.

That which is not deſigned to repreſent any thing but itſelf, can never be capable of a wrong repreſentation, nor miſlead us from the true apprehenſion of any thing by its diſlikeneſs to it; and ſuch, excepting thoſe of ſubſtances, are all our own complex ideas. Locke.

DISLI'KER. n. ſ. [from diſlike.] A diſapprover; one that is not pleaſed.

There is a point, which whoever can touch, will never fail of pleaſing a majority, ſo great that the diſlikers will be forced to fall in with the herd. Swift.

To DISLI'MB. v. a. [dis and limb.] To dilaniate; to tear limb from limb. Dict.

To DISLI'MN. v. a. [dis and limn.] To unpaint; to ſtrike out of a picture.

That which is now a horſe, even with a thought
The rack diſlimns, and makes it indiſtinct
As water is in water. Shakeſpeare's Ant. and Cleop.

Though too much moiſture in an infant's brain,
And too much drineſs in an old man's ſenſe,
Cannot the prints of outward things retain:
Then doth the ſoul want work, and idle ſit,
And this we childiſhneſs and dotage call. Davies.
I hold, that perfect joy makes all our parts
As joyful as our hearts:
Our ſenſes tell us, if we pleaſe not them,
Our love is but a dotage, or a dream. Suckling.
(2.) If on your head my fury does not turn,
Thank that fond dotage which ſo much you ſcorn. Dryden.

Do'tal. adj. [dotalis, Latin.] Relating to the portion of a woman; conſtituting her portion; compriſed in her portion.

Shall I, of one poor dotal town poſſeſt,
My people thin, my wretched country waſte?
An exil'd prince, and on a ſhaking throne,
Or riſk my patron's ſubjects, or my own? Garth's Ovid.

Do'tard. n. ſ. [from dote.] A man whoſe age has impaired his intellects; a man in his ſecond childhood; called in ſome provinces a twichild.

Dotard, ſaid he, let be thy deep adviſe,
Seems that through many years thy wits thee fail,
And that weak old hath left thee nothing wiſe,
Elſe never ſhould thy judgment be ſo frail. Fairy Queen.
The ſickly dotard wants a wife,
To draw off his laſt dregs of life. Prior.
